The little procession arranged itself as Louise had intimated. Madame de Melbain led the way, ushered by the major-domo and followed immediately by the Baron and Mademoiselle de Courcelles. Wrayson with Louise, brought up the rear. They crossed the white-flagged hall, and entered an apartment which Wrayson, although his capacity for wonder was diminishing, felt himself compelled to pause and admire. It was of great height, and again the curiously shaped windows were filled with stained glass. The oak-panelled walls, black with age, were hung with portraits, sombre and yet vivid, and upon a marble pedestal at the end of the room, life-like, and untouched by the centuries, stood a wonderful presentation of Ralph de St. Etarpe, the founder of the house, clad in the armour of his days. The dinner table, with its brilliant and modern appurtenances of flowers and plate, standing in the middle of the floor, seemed like a minute and yet startling anachronism. The brilliant patches of scarlet geranium, the deep blue livery of the two footmen, the glitter of the venetian glass upon the table, were like notes of alien colour amongst surroundings whose chief characteristic was a magnificent restraint, and yet such dignity as it was possible to import into the everyday business of eating and drinking was certainly manifest in the meal, which presently took its leisurely course.

Wrayson, although no one could accuse him of a lack of savoir faire, yet found himself scarcely at his ease. Madame de Melbain, erect, dignified, and beautiful, sat at the head of the table, and although she addressed a remark to each of them occasionally, she remained always unapproachable. The Baron made only formal attempts at conversation, and Mademoiselle de Courcelles was absolutely silent. Wrayson was unable to divest himself of the feeling of representing an alien presence amongst a little community drawn closely together by some mysterious tie. Louise was his only link with them, and to Louise he decided to devote himself entirely, regardless of the apparent demands of custom. His position at the table enabled him to do this, and very soon he discovered that it was precisely what was expected of him. The conversation between the others, such as it was, lapsed into German, or some kindred tongue. Wrayson found himself able presently to talk confidentially with Louise.

"Remember," he said, after a slight pause, "that I have finished altogether with the role of investigator. I no longer have an curiosity about anything. Still, I think that there is something which I ought to tell you."

She smiled.

"You may tell me as much as you like," she said, "as long as you don't ask questions."

"Exactly! Well, there is another Englishman staying at the Lion d'Or. He appears to be a decent fellow, and a gentleman. I am not going to talk about him. I imagine that he is harmless."

"We have heard of him," Louise murmured. "It certainly appears as though he were only an ordinary tourist. Has any one else arrived?"

"Yes," Wrayson answered, "some one else has arrived, and I want to tell you about him."

Louise was obviously disturbed. She refused a course a little impatiently, and turned towards Wrayson anxiously.

"But the landlord," she said in a low tone, "has orders to receive no more guests."

"This man arrived to luncheon today," Wrayson answered. "The landlord could not refuse him that. He wished for a room and was told that he could not be taken in."

"Well, who is he, what is he like?" she demanded.

"He is a miserable sort of bounder—an imitation Cockney tourist, with ready-made English clothes, a knapsack, and a camera. I should have felt suspicious about him myself, but the other fellow whom I told you about, who is staying at the Inn, recognized him. He had seen him abroad, and what he told me seems decisive. I am afraid that he is a spy."

Wrayson cursed himself for a moment that he had been so outspoken, for the girl by his side seemed almost on the point of collapse. Her eyes were full of fear, and she clutched at the tablecloth as though overcome with a spasm of terror.

"Don't be alarmed," Wrayson whispered in her ear. "I am sure, I am quite sure, that he is not here for what you may fear. I don't believe he is an Englishman at all."

The girl recovered herself amazingly.

"I was not thinking of myself," she said quietly, and Wrayson noticed that her eyes were fixed upon the pale, distinguished face of the woman who sat with a certain air of isolation at the head of the table.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Wrayson found himself a few minutes later alone with the Baron, who, with some solemnity, rose and took the chair opposite to him. Conversation between them, however, languished, for the Baron spoke only in monosyllables, and his attitude gave Wrayson the idea that he viewed his presence at the chateau with disfavour. With stiff punctiliousness, he begged Wrayson to try some wonderful Burgundy, and passed a box of cigarettes. He did not, however, open any topic of conversation, and Wrayson, embarrassed in his choice of subjects by the fact that any remark he could make might sound like an attempt at gratifying his curiosity, remained also silent. In a very few minutes the Baron rose.

"You will take another glass of wine, sir?" he asked.

Wrayson rose too with alacrity, and bowed his refusal. They recrossed the great hall and entered the drawing-room. Louise and Madame de Melbain were talking earnestly together in a corner, and from the look that the latter threw at him as they entered, Wrayson was convinced that in some way he was concerned with the subject of their conversation. It was a look deliberate and scrutinizing, in a sense doubtful, and yet not unkindly. Behind it all, Wrayson felt that there was something which he could not understand, there was something of the mystery in those dark, sad eyes which seemed to pervade the whole atmosphere of the place and the lives of these people.

Louise rose as he approached and motioned him to take her vacated place.

Obliged to Quit Business

So Dreadful Was the Suffering From Itching Piles

After Twenty Years of Pile Torture Relief and Cure Came with

Dr. Chase's Ointment

You take no risk and you make no experiment when you use Dr. Chase's Ointment for piles. Many doctors still cling to the idea that nothing but an operation will effect a cure. But operations are expensive and dangerous and often fail in their results. Some have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after operations had failed.

Dr. Chase's Ointment truly has a wonderful record as a cure. Here is a case which was reported recently:

Mr. John P. Marshall, 14 Barnes road, St. John's, Nfld., writes: "For upwards of twenty years I was troubled terribly with itching piles; at times so bad that I was obliged to lay up—unable to attend to business.

"I tried many treatments without benefit, until I accidentally read of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found at last a cure by using this ointment. I only used one box and part of a second one when I was completely cured and have had no return of the piles. That was eighteen months ago, and needless to say, I attribute this cure to Dr. Chase's Invaluable Ointment."

Many sufferers from piles have tried so many scores of treatments that they cannot believe that cure is possible. In order to convince the skeptical we are always willing to send a sample box free to anyone who encloses a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

A WEAK, ACHING BACK CAUSED HER MUCH MISERY

Could Not Work and Had No Ambition For Anything.

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

Weak, lame or aching back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidneys are out of order the whole system becomes deranged.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles.

Mrs. W. R. Hodge, Fielding, Sask., writes:—"A few lines highly recommending Doan's Kidney Pills. For this last year I have been troubled very much with nasty sick headaches, and a weak, aching back which caused me much misery, for I could not work and had no ambition for anything. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and kept me from sleeping at nights, I tried many kinds of pills and medicines but it seemed almost in vain. I began to give up in despair of ever being well and strong again, when a kind neighbor advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and am thankful for the relief I obtained from them, for now I am never in trouble with a sore back or sick headaches. I will always say Doan's Kidney Pills for mine, and can highly recommend them to any sufferers."

DECLINE OF MANNERS

On the Downgrade Among All Classes Says the Globe.

The outburst of the mob spirit during the great English strike have been followed by much moralizing as to the cause of the violence displayed. Two things the critics are agreed upon, says the Globe: that there is not enough ethical instruction in the schools, and that the manners of all classes of the people are on the down grade. The mob spirit is the heritage of the manners that are manifested in lack of consideration for the old and infirm, in self-assertion, and in rudeness. Children who cry "Shoesy" at a passing pedler, who elbow their elders off the sidewalk, who speak disrespectfully of their teachers, will throw bricks at the officers of the law in the crises of a strike and believe they have performed a meritorious act.

The manners of young girls seem to be going to pieces more rapidly even than those of young men. An instance is given that is gruesome in its suggestiveness — Prosecuting a number of girls at Crewe for stealing ribbons from graves in the cemetery, the Town Clerk said the depredation of flowers and ribbons was appalling. Young girls had within half an hour of interment stripped the wreathes of ribbons, which they used for millinery purposes. It was a scadalous and despicable shame that the graves of the people could not be left in peace. It ought to be the pride and pleasure of everybody to protect the dead from such sacrilege. A cemetery was God's acre, he said, and he could not think of anything more despicable than to commit robberies from it. The Chairman of the Bench, who said it was a crying shame, severely reprimanded the accused, and discharged them.

When such incidents are possible it becomes supremely important that all having to do with the upbringing of children should devote much time to the inculcating of manners in the best sense of the term. Consideration for others, the placing of self in a subordinate position, the elevation of the public good to the supreme place, are the rules of conduct that alone can produce true courtesy. On this side of the Atlantic there is even greater need for the teaching of ethics than in Great Britain, even if we have not yet begun to rob the dead to provide hat trimmings.

SOLOMON WHITE

Sketch of the Career of the Late Mayor of Cobalt

The late Solomon White, K.C., Mayor of Cobalt, was for many years a conspicuous figure in the public life of Ontario. He was a native of Essex County, and was called to the bar in 1865. Three years afterwards he removed to Cooksville, Peel county, where he owned and successfully managed the Clair View Vineyards, grape-growing and wine-making, under the corporate name of the Canadian Vine Growers' Association. Towards the end of 1876 Mr. White sold out his fruit farm and wine establishment at Cooksville and removed again to Windsor to take up the practice of his profession.

Apart from his legal practice Mr. White owned a magnificent stock farm, comprising 500 acres, three miles from Windsor, and on a portion of the farm not used for stock he located many vine-growers from France, and on this farm he established a beautiful summer home. Mr. White served as President of the Windsor Driving Park Association, the Essex County Agricultural Society, and the Windsor Land and Improvement Company. He made a specialty of trotting horses and Shorthorn cattle, and his exhibits were always among the best in their respective classes.

In 1890 he was nominated for the Legislature for North Essex; he was elected at that time and served in the capacity of M.P. for fifteen years in all.

Not only was Mr. White a devotee of horce racing and general sports, but he was in his younger days an athlete of more than ordinary ability, canoeing being one of the favorite pastimes. While Mr. White did not remain in Cobalt on his first visit he was one of the first to realize the possibilities and opportunities of the camp, and he immediately arranged to move to Cobalt; he was therefore a pioneer of the great silver camp. Being educated in French as well as English was a factor that added much to Mr. White's future in Cobalt, where he not only built up a lucrative law practice, but he also acquired large real estate and mining interests which proved profitable.

"SALT RHEUM"

Had It On Hands For Two Years.

ITCHED SO DID NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO.

Tried Three Doctors and Went to Hospital.

All skin diseases are more or less occasioned by a bad state of the blood, and no one can expect to be free from some form or other of skin trouble unless the blood is kept in good shape. All skin diseases can be very easily cured by the wonderful blood cleansing properties of Burdock Blood Bitters.

This is due to the unrivalled purifying action of Burdock Blood Bitters on the blood, coupled with the thorough manner in which it cleanses and expels the impurities from the body.

Mrs. Richard Coutine, White Head, Que., writes:—"I have been bothered with salt rheum, on my hands, for two years, and it itched so I did not know what to do. I tried three doctors, and even went to Montreal to the hospital without getting any relief. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got three bottles, and before I had the second used I found a big change, and now to-day I am cured."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for about 35 years and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

DUPED THE PEOPLE

Amazing Mission of a "Bogus Count" Who Promised Financial Miracles

An amazing story of a pretended count who duped large numbers of people on the strength of a bogus "mission" which was to work financial wonders in Italy, Asia Minor, and Abyssinia, comes from Paris.

The adventurer's name is Cognel, but he was also known as the Comte de Bellefond de Gournes. Some time ago he founded what he termed the Franco-Italian Mission to exploit certain "concessions" in the countries named. Many people were duped by his plausible address, including, it is said, two wealthy bankers who furnished a large part of the money which enabled the "mission" to start in semi-regal state for Italy. Cognel persuaded his dupes that he had the support of the Italian Government, and that King Victor Emmanuel had appointed him a Commissioner to look after the Colonial interests of Italy in Erythrea. The mission has a royal time in Turin, Milan, Rome and Naples. Cognel held an official reception, called on the editors of all the principal newspapers, was received by the Archbishop of Milan, and generally seems to have fooled everybody with whom he came in contact. At length the funds supplied by the French bankers began to run low, and Cognel was about to abandon the game and flee, when a wealthy young Italian named Bertoletti turned up from Brescia, and was caught in the adventurer's net. He invested 10,000 francs in the mission, and this enabled Cognel to get as far as Rome, where he had the audacity to call on the Prefect of the Eternal City, on the Military Commandant, General Poro, and other important persons, most of whom seem to have been hypnotized by him.

General Poro, however, was not to be deceived so readily. He happened to know something of Abyssinia, and, after hearing one of Cognel's eloquent addresses, quietly pointed out that if the orator had ever been in that country he would not talk so hopefully about its prospects. Cognel was wise enough to take the hint, and he cleared out of Rome without delay. Later on inquiries were made about him, and he was arrested on board a steamer bound for Salonica; but with his usual address he managed to give his captors the slip, and was not heard of again until he turned up at Granville as a high official in the French colonial service, and the director of a school for training colonial officials. Every day almost, says the "Daily Telegraph," some fresh sensation turns up about this extraordinary man, as to whose exploits the humble efforts of the German tailor known as the Captain of Koepenick, which amused Europe a few years ago, sink into complete insignificance.

"LITTLE WHITE SLAVES"

Shocking Revelations in a Book Published in Berlin.

A stir has been caused in Berlin by the publication of a book entitled, "Little White Slaves," written by a former woman police assistant, Sister Henrietta Arendt, who alleges that hundreds of German children are sold into slavery.

A female "employment agent" in Berlin said that she delivered children abroad for different purposes at prices ranging from $75 to $2,500, a particularly large number going to Russia. Neither the police, the municipal guardians nor the children rescue societies ever created any trouble. Only a few weeks ago a child had been delivered to a Russian "baron" for $2,500 but in this case the child came of good stock from aristocratic parents and was well worth the price paid for it.

The average buying price of a child of working-class parents in Berlin is $75, while for children of better class people more money is paid, running up to $1,250 and $2,500 for children of noble birth.

Sugar beets grown in Norfolk and Suffolk, England, are now being sent from Yarmouth to Holland.

EMPRESS CHARLOTTE

It is Feared that the Royal Widow May Return to Sanity

One hardly ever hears about the unfortunate "Empress Charlotte," the aunt of the present King of the Belgians, and widow of Emperor Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, who was shot down forty-four years ago by the Republicans of Mexico. The terrible events which swept away her husband and her crown have shielded the unfortunate lady from public curiosity, the only fact known being that she is tended with Imperial honors and affectionate care in the secluded castle Bochart, where at the age of 72, she she lives a solitary life, in blissful ignorance of the tragic past. To-day, however, there is a well founded report that the Empress Charlotte, after an illness of short duration is experiencing a slow return to sanity. For the first time since she lost her reason, after the refusal of Napoleon III and the Pope to intervene and save her husband from the fury of his Mexican subjects, she has uttered the name of Maximilian. It is fervently hoped, in Royal circles, that this mental resurrection will go no further, as it could only be attended with terrible agony. Maximilian had not yet been tried and shot when the mere foreboding of what was coming caused his Consort to lose her reason. If she recovered complete consciousness she would face anew two terrible facts, the loss of both her husband and her crown in the events of 1867. This would be infinitely more cruel that a state of insanity which has hidden the truth from her for nearly half a century.

DEATH OF McHENRY.

The recent death of Myron E. McHenry, the "man from Freeport," has brought forth many eulogistic references to the dead reinsman's ability when race driving, and the critics one and all agree that McHenry was the peer of all pilots of trotters and pacers. It was in October, 1903, that McHenry drove Dan Patch to the best pacing record in 1.56¼, the performance eclipsing anything previously done by a "side-wheel" horse.

The Paris newspapers record a feat of endurance on the part of one Thorpe, described as a native of Bohemia, who played the piano for thirty hours and fifteen minutes without stoping. The former record was held by Mr. Waterbury, whose performance extended over twenty-eight and a half hours. The report states that Thorpe was fed and given stimulants during the entertainment.

The Detective's Escape from the Molly Maguires

Openly Accused of Treachery, James McParland, the Pinkerton Man, Boldly Demanded a Trial by the Body Masters, and the Ruse Saved His Life

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

THERE is just one mystery that James McParland would like to solve, and that is how he was first suspected by the Molly Maguire band of Pennsylvania of being a detective. There have been many solutions offered, but none of them is certain. But suspected he was, and it was only by a wonderful display of nerve that he was not killed, for many attempts were made to assassinate him by members of the band of murderers.

"After thirty-five years I am not sure how I was first suspected," declared Mr. McParland as he sat in his office of the Denver branch of the Pinkerton agency. "I have ideas, of course, but, as I say, I am not sure. And I don't suppose I will ever find out."

"All sorts of efforts were made to kill me," was suggested.

"Yes, a good many attempts, but I managed to escape each time," he replied.

"For years the Molly Maguires had been killing men, burning buildings and destroying property generally throughout Schuylkill, Carbon, Luzerne and Columbia counties, in Pennsylvania, without being molested by law and order," he went on. "Law and order, as a matter of fact, were afraid of the Mollies, and rightly so.

"I had been a member of the Mollies for some two years, and in the time of my membership many of the band had been arrested and were face to face with justice at last. Some one had been 'giving away' their secrets. Who could it be? I heard mutterings and discussions on all sides. It was agreed among the men that some detective had been obtaining evidence or a traitor had managed to creep into the organization.

"It was important to keep the finger of suspicion away from myself. The arrest of Captain R. J. Linden, assistant superintendent of the Pinkertons in the district, had of course caused some uneasiness, but the Mollies knew that no outsider could ever gain all the facts. I would send my daily reports to Benjamin Franklin at Philadelphia, and through him Captain Linden was kept informed, and in this way we could work together.

Getting a Bad Reputation.

"I arranged a little bunkey with Linden so as to disarm any talk about my being a detective. We agreed that I would be in Malachi Clewer's saloon, in Shenandoah, one evening and that Linden should enter. I made it my business to have a number of Mollies in the saloon, and I was talking louder than any one present when Linden entered. He walked to the bar and bought a drink, and then looked over at me.

"'Why, hello, McKenna,' he said.

"I turned and looked at Linden. 'Guess I don't know you,' I said.

"'Oh, you know me all right, Jim. You are Jimmie McKenna, and I knew you in Buffalo before you pulled off that last trick,' he answered with a laugh.

"I had given myself a bad reputation—for that counted with the Mollies—and had told about killing a man in Buffalo, among other things.

"All the others had crowded around as we talked. Here at last was a man from the outside world who knew 'Jimmie' McKenna, and he was a detective. He was also confirming my stories of being a bad man. My stock in trade went away up with the Mollies.

"'We had a drink together and Linden managed to get some of the fellows to one side and say:—'That is a mighty bad man, McKenna is sure a dangerous fellow—will drop a man as quick as look at him. You fellows better look out for him.'"

Mr. McParland laughed heartily as he recalled this incident of so many years ago.

"It was not long before the stories Linden told about me were circulated among the Mollies, and I gained better friends among them every day. I continued to play the part of the bad man with a known reputation, and every time I went into Cleery's I would ask him to 'tip me off' if he noticed Linden coming down the street. I would often hide in a back room from Linden, and this little side play had its effect. While this trick did some good it did not stop talk of the traitor in the camp. I knew what would happen to me if suspicion turned in my direction.

"When I was first sent to Eastern Pennsylvania to gather evidence against this famous band of murderers it was agreed that I was never to go on the witness stand. A written agreement was prepared releasing me from giving any testimony as a court witness, and, while I did take the witness chair in the end, I was glad to have the promise at the time. It was easy enough to gather evidence against certain members of the band, but we wanted to round up all the leaders at one time, or at least catch all the guilty men before I quit the case.

Suspected of Being Detective.

"It has always been more or less of a mystery to me how my name was first suspected to be an assumed one by the Mollies. Different persons have advanced a number of theories. One was that I had dropped a letter which gave a clew. This cannot be true, for I always destroyed a letter the moment I had finished reading it. Another idea was that I had to sign my name to a draft to get some money. All these are wrong.

"John, or 'Jack' Kehoe, as he was called, was a bodymaster and was one of the brightest and smartest men you would care to meet. He was bold and defiant to the last second of his life. He was really the brains and chief leader of the Mollies.

"Kehoe must have gone back over the work of the Mollies since I became a member. He must have traced out the efforts of the band during my two years' membership and he could not help knowing that there had been a remarkable number of arrests of the Mollies in that particular period. Who could be causing all these arrests? By deduction it might have settled upon me. One day Frank McAndrew, bodymaster of the Shenandoah district, sent for me.

"'Jimmie,' he began, 'I hear talk that you are a detective.'

"At last it had come. I looked at McAndrew for the fraction of a second, and in that fraction I did a lifetime of thinking.

"'Who is telling that lie? Who is the man that dares say that?' I shouted.

"'I can't tell you who started it, but it is a fact that the boys are talking about it,' he went on.

"'What do you think about it, Mac?' I asked.

"'I think it is a lie,' he said. His confidence decided me to bluff out the matter to an end."

"Why was that not a good time to get out of the case?"

"True, I could have stopped on the case then, for we had made much progress and many arrests were about to be made, but I wanted to go on and get more details," and the strong jaws of the detective closed with a snap.

"I learned later that a conductor on a railroad train had suggested that I was a detective. Perhaps he guessed it from my being so much on the cars, but it could only have been a guess on his part.

"A number of the Mollies were in jail for the murder of Policeman Yost, and it was on February 12, 1876, that their attorneys were to apply for a habeas corpus. The Mollies at the time were desperate to find the man who had furnished the evidence that caused the arrest of their comrades.

"I sent word to Captain Linden, telling him the situation, and he insisted on my withdrawing from the case at once, but my fighting blood was up and I insisted that I would go on, but it would help some if he could keep as close tabs on me as possible.

"I met McAndrew again and told him I was going to face Kehoe and force him to tell me where he had got the story. Kehoe was in 'Danny' Hughes' saloon when I found him, surrounded by a score of Mollies. I sized up the crowd as I walked into the saloon and brushed a number of the men to one side as I halted in front of Kehoe.

"'Jack, I hear you are circulating stories about my being a detective,' I began. 'No man can live and say that unless he proves it. Are you ready to prove it?' And I shouted the last words at the top of my voice—so loud that it made the Mollies jump.

"He looked me over while I waited for the verdict.

"'I have heard the stories, McKenna,' he said in an even voice. 'Some one is telling secrets, and some of the boys say you are a detective. Are you?' He snapped out the question with a surly drop of his jaw.

"'You heard what I said,' I answered. 'We will settle this matter once and for all. I demand a trial by the bodymasters—get them all together, and get them at once. I will write the call for the trial myself. I will get the bodymasters to decide whether I am a detective or not.'

"The bluff appeared to work, for I could see that Kehoe was astonished at my boldness and apparent fearlessness. He knew that a man would be taking a long chance by going before the bodymasters if he could not be sure of drawing a clean bill of health. I wrote the call for the meeting and gave it to Kehoe, while the crowd looked on. Some of the boys expected me to buy them a drink, but I told them that I was not going to stand treat while this charge was against my name.

"I was told afterward that I had not any more than walked out of the place when Kehoe seemed to come to life again. I had dulled his suspicions, but had not convinced him. He received some more information soon after I left the saloon, and, calling McAndrew to him, he said:—'For God's sake, Mac, McKenna must be killed to-night or he will hang half the people in this county.'

"McAndrew was not to be swayed. He still stood by me, declaring that I had proven time and again that I was not a detective but a loyal Molly. Kehoe was stubborn, and he called a dozen men to his home and told them that I was to be killed. I was in Pottsville at this time and decided to go to Shenandoah, where the bodymasters would try me, I thought.

"The call I had written for the meeting was never sent out. Some one suddenly got the idea that I had called on the bodymasters to meet in one place so they would all be arrested together. This idea grew until it became a fact in the minds of some of the men. I got a report of this before I left Pottsville, but I thought it would turn out all right."

"Where did you go then? It would seem you were taking long chances."

"I went to Shenandoah, and I did some hard thinking while making the trip," he said. "As a rule several of the boys would meet me at the station. They generally got word that I would be coming along and they knew it meant a drink and a good time. Then, too, they respected me for being a good Molly. But when I got off the train I looked around for some of the men and there was not one in sight.

"Perhaps my heart did beat a bit faster. It looked bad, mighty bad, to me. I walked on down the street and saw 'Mike' McDermott leaning against a post. I spoke to him, but he was a bit distant to me. I walked on a few steps further and there saw 'Ed' Sweeney loafing by the entrance to a saloon. They were waiting, I knew that. They had been selected as part of the gang to kill me. They were killers, all right; I knew that. But I also knew they were cowards at heart.

"I went straight to McAndrew's home. He had gone on ahead of me and I wanted to get the latest news of the organization. When I walked into his home his astonishment was so great I thought he would faint. He was certainly surprised to see me; surprised to see me alive, perhaps.

"Bluffing" the Mollies.

"There was no fooling around on my part. I went straight to the subject and talked him into being a big booster, again, for me. While I was in his home half a dozen of the fellows dropped in. They did not have a word to say to me. They did not stay long and went out. In about half an hour one of the men returned and threw a bunch of snow at McAndrew's feet. Silently he got up and walked out of the room and did not come back for a few minutes. When he did return I told him I was going home, but I left the house by way of a window and reached my own room by a new route."

"But hardly to sleep?" it was suggested.

"There was no sleep for me that night," he replied. "The next morning I met Dennis Scanlan and 'Mike' Doyle about eleven o'clock. Doyle was pretty drunk. I knew they were two more killers—I had spotted four of the dozen who were to do me up, but I did not know the number that had been appointed to kill me.

"McAndrew found me down town, and I told him I was going to get a sleigh and drive over to see Kehoe. I explained to him that I believed that 'Jack' was going to play fair with me, but, as it was, I knew I was not to have a chance.

"'Well, you don't go alone,' McAndrew told me. 'I will make the drive with you.'

"McAndrew, I felt sure, was doing all in his power to save me from being killed. I again managed to get word to Linden and he once more insisted that I get out of the vicinity, leave the district and bury myself in another part of the country for a time. I told him it would not do any good that I must do my best to bluff the matter out, or, if I could not do that, I was then going to come out in the open and go on the witness stand. I would take up my own name and the Mollies would know for sure who had worked up the evidence against them.

"That ride to Kehoe's home is one that I shall never forget. I had every reason to think we might be attacked on the road, but the presence of McAndrew must have saved me. We did not waste any time in getting to Kehoe's. There I found a larger crowd than I had expected.

"'How about the trial?' I began. 'When will the bodymasters meet?'

"'I did not send the call. I changed my mind. No need of it,' Kehoe replied.

"I knew he was lying and I knew that he had made up his mind to have me killed before another sun came up. I tried to gain the sympathy of his wife, and I did, for she took up a poker and declared she would brain any man that laid hands on me. I talked as I never talked before, and it seemed as if I had pulled some of the boys back into line, and even Kehoe was on my side until I had left the house again. Then he swung back, declaring I was a detective, stronger in his words than ever.

"I wanted to go around to town that night, but McAndrew coaxed me to go to bed.

"'I am going to sleep with you to-night, McKenna,' he said. 'I guess the boys think you are all right, but we don't dare take any chances. Some of them may not have heard that Kehoe thinks you are O. K. and that you are certainly "Jimmie" McKenna, the bulliest Molly of us all.'

"While we were sleeping Kehoe organized his dozen men to kill me. It was decided that I could not be shot, owing to the noise of the weapons, and they knew I was armed.

"It was almost certain that I would kill a few of them before they 'got' me if they tried to attack me in a saloon. They were cowards when it came to a real conflict, so an even dozen had been appointed to get one man. True they did not want me to slip through their fingers.

"Some of the men armed themselves with axes, some had taken pieces from mines and cut off the handles. The rest had knives, sling shots and tomahawks. Just where they were to kill me had not been decided, but all agreed to keep close on my track the following day and at a given signal they were to rush on me. A ran from one of the sledge hammers would do the work, but they wanted to be bunched and get me when I could not use my revolver. Of course, I learned all of these details later.

End of McKenna.

"The next day I went to see a man and put the entire matter before him. There is no need of my bringing this man's name into the case after all these years. It would open up a discussion that has been argued a great many times and without any results. He was a good man and a man of honor, and I told him all about my being supposed to be a detective. We had a long talk and, it turned out, one of the Mollies had crept into his house and heard all I said, while I did my best to convince him I was not a detective. I left him knowing I had gone as far as I could. I had to come out in the open. James McKenna was a man of the past. James McParlan had come into being once more."

"And then you hurried away from that part of the country?" was the natural question.

"I made my way to see Captain Linden and I told him I had done all I could," he answered. "He wanted me to leave town at once, but I would not consent to this, as I was at last determined to go on the witness stand.

"The prosecution was handicapped, I knew, by not being able to call me. Some of the most valuable evidence against some of the men arrested could not be used because the prosecution had agreed not to call me as a witness for fear of my being killed. This was delaying their work. But the long siege was at an end. I was no longer a Molly Maguire. A much different work was ahead of me.

"The fact that I was a witness at a number of the trials and had to stand cross-examination is only a detail that is court history. Beginning then, of course, there were many threats made against my life and attempts to carry them out, but I am still alive, well and hearty, and with every indication that I have many years before me."

LABOR-LIFE AND THE LAW

Although the Condition of New York's Factory Workers Has Improved 500 Per Cent. in a Decade, the Legislature in This State, as in Others, Still Wrestles with Problems of Master and Man.

"HOW can the condition of factory workers and laborers be improved?"

That is a question which is agitating the Legislature of nearly all of the States. Conditions under which employes labor call forth constant condemnation from all classes, and it seems to be the general opinion that little is being done to protect the man, the woman or the child who labors in a factory.

The conditions under which they live and work are not ideal; there is room for improvement, but legislation, the work of associations, and commissions, appointed by Governors, are making gigantic strides in the direction of the ideal. Within ten years, in the State of New York, the condition of factory workers has improved, according to reports of the State Commission on Labor, about five hundred per cent, and still the men who mould the laws in Albany are rightly not satisfied and further steps are contemplated in the interests of the laborer.

In short, the protection of the factory worker has become a science.

Not only does the State say "This must be done," but it inquires into the reasons for adverse conditions and distributes knowledge which may help the laborer himself to remedy them. For instance, the Bureau of Labor Statistics prepares an annual report on "Unemployment." This consists of lists of members of labor unions idle at the end of each month and the reason for the idleness, whether it is disability to work, accident, strike, lockout or lack of work. Suggestions are made as to the cause of the trouble and how it might be removed.

A few years ago there was no such thing as this report. If there was an unusual amount of idleness it became the topic of discussion a election time, when candidates of both parties made wild promises to bring good times and "work for all." To-day trained men are constantly at work finding out why others are idle and telling them how they themselves may bring about conditions that will give them work.

Then there is the Bureau of Mediation and Arbitration, the work of which is to adjust disputes, if possible, before a strike has actually been called. Ten years ago the members of a union might strike and they would be left to fight it out with the employers. Want and actual starvation are attendant upon many strikes, and it is to prevent this as well as to stave off injury to an industry that the Bureau of Mediation and Arbitration exists.

Recent disasters, notably the Washington place fire, in which 146 shirt waist makers perished, have called forth storms of protest against the lack of inspectors to enforce the law and to ferret out violations of it. This has been one of the big problems which confronted the State government, but in the new laws of 1911 provision is made for a much larger staff of inspectors.

The new act provides for the division of the State into eight districts, each under the direction of a supervising inspector with a local office. His salary is to be $2,500 a year. The quality of inspection work is further raised by the appointment of a mechanical engineer, with a salary of $3,500, to the technical staff of the Bureau of Factory Inspection, and the salary of the chief inspector has been raised from $3,000 to $4,000 a year. The number of inspectors was increased from fifty-two to eighty-five and a higher level of salary allowed.

Defects in the Old Law.

This means that in New York State there are more inspectors, compared with the number of factory workers, than there are in Great Britain, where labor laws are supposed to be greatly advanced. Penalties are provided for the violation of factory laws, and with the increased staff of inspectors the State is determined to enforce the regulations.

"It is not long ago," said John J. Murphy, Commissioner of Tenements, the other day, "when so-called sweat shops existed in the city by the hundreds. There is no need to describe them. All know the terrible conditions under which the inmates worked. Hardly a block but had at least one of these institutions. The new tenement house laws did away with these to a great extent, requiring a certain amount of light, efficient ventilation and a certain amount of air space for every person.

"But the laws affected only houses built after a certain date, and the old houses were continued under the same conditions as before. Where we could condemn a building of course changes had to be made or the building torn down. In other cases we could require certain changes, but not enough to make the place sanitary for working.

"A very short time ago I could cite any number of cases where twelve women would sit all day long in an unventilated room about fifteen feet square and sew from eight o'clock in the morning until five at night. Then most of them would leave, and after threads and clippings of cloth had been shoved into a corner supper would be eaten in the same room, and then four of the family would sleep there.

"The man or woman who leased the premises would say that the others were relatives or friends come to visit, and that was all an inspector or a janitor could get out of them. There was no remedy for it. To-day such a place would be put out of business within four hours. The license to do work there would be revoked and no firm would be allowed to have their work done on the premises, a fine being the penalty for violation of the law.

"The Commissioner of Labor of the State issues licenses to tenants in tenement houses to take work to their premises and specifies the number of persons who may work at one time on the premises. Without the license no firm is allowed to give work to a tenant to be done at home, and before the license is issued the Tenement House Commissioner reports favorably or unfavorably on the condition of the building. Unless the tenement house laws are complied with the license is not granted, except in extraordinary cases, where the trouble is lack of light in a hall or some other thing which does not directly affect the premises where the work will be actually performed. This prevents the doing of what we call 'home work' in old ramshackle buildings which do not come under the new tenement house laws."

Numerous laws have recently been enacted in the interests of sanitary conditions in factories and workshops, including bakeries and small confectionery shops. Workmen need no longer leave the factory begrimed with soot and covered with grease and filth. Not only because legislation requires it, but because the workman demands it and the employer sees the benefit of it, washrooms have been installed in thousands of factories.

One of the organizations prominent in the work of obtaining labor legislation is the American Association for Labor Legislation. This association recently recommended a bill which was passed by the New York Legislature requiring physicians to report to the Labor Commissioner all cases of what was known in the law as "industrial diseases." Such a law was recommended by the same association in all the States and was passed in five besides New York.

Under this law a physician who attends a case of arsenic or mercury poisoning, for instance, must immediately report it to the Labor Commissioner. From time to time statistics are compiled and a thorough investigation made of all cases of such diseases as are frequently contracted in certain industries. The history of each case is studied and the conditions under which it was contracted are investigated with a view to minimizing the danger. This affords necessary information for the enactment of intelligent laws to protect employes who are constantly exposed to the diseases in question.

Besides this the information is disseminated among manufacturers and suggestions made as to how better to protect employes. The information itself is helpful to the employer in protecting the men working for him. The diseases which commonly come under the head "industrial" are poisoning from lead, phosphorous, arsenic, mercury, or caisson troubles, and anthrax, an illness caused by working under high air pressure.

"Educate the Employe."

"The way to obtain greater safety for workers in factories," says John Williams, the State Commissioner of Labor, "is through education, not only of employers, but of employes. No man wants to have his employes run unnecessary risks." The laws are growing every year to make him more and more responsible for the safety of those under him, but, besides that, the very interests of business argue for the protection of the men who carry on its work. In this line there was created last year by act of the Legislature the American Museum of Safety, the object of whose members is to study the causes of accidents, the means of preventing them and the application of this knowledge to the sanitation and safety of buildings and machinery. The members of the museum are authorized to purchase grounds and erect a building suitable to the purpose of exhibiting models and devices and systems which tend to increase safety and sanitary conditions.

"In this museum building when it is completed will be shown all sorts of guards for belts, patent devices for automatically stopping machinery when something goes wrong, fire extinguishers, the proper method of erecting scaffolding—in fact, every mechanism or construction which has for its primary purpose the protection of life and health. Attendants in the museum building will demonstrate the use of the devices shown, estimate the cost of fitting out a plant with safety devices, advise employers in the best way to make buildings fireproof and give their expert knowledge in installing systems for extinguishing fires."

Fire Greatest Danger.

Fire, of course, is one of the greatest wholesale dangers to factories, and especially to loft buildings. Millions of dollars have been spent in fighting fires, but the cry has always been that nothing was being done to prevent fires. Besides strengthening the laws which tend to prevent fires last year, the Legislature provided for a commission of nine members to investigate the conditions under which manufacturing is carried on in lofts and other factories in first and second class cities of the State.

This act was the direct result of the agitation following the Washington place, or Asch Building, fire in New York on March 25 last. Although the commission is particularly to investigate the conditions in loft buildings and is primarily interested in conditions relating to fire prevention and escape from fire, any factory of any character will be studied and the investigations will cover anything with reference to health and the general public safety.

The act carries an appropriation of $10,000 and directs the commission to report by February 15, 1912. The commission is composed of two Senators, two Assemblymen, four members appointed by the Governor and the Governor ex officio.

Another law passed in 1911 which greatly reduces the danger from fire is the establishment of a State Fire Marshal, whose duty it is to enforce all State laws concerning prevention of fires, fire escapes and exits from factories and other places where persons work daily. The State Fire Marshal is directly responsible for cities having a population of 1,000,000 or less, but in larger cities his duties are coincident with the Commissioner of Labor, the Tenement House Commission and the local fire department.

"There are plenty of good laws, but no way to enforce them," is a popular cry, but the power given to the State Fire Marshal and his assistants would seem to answer that effectively in the case of fire laws.

Manner of Serving Order.

For instance, an assistant of the State Fire Marshal may find that in a certain factory the doors open inward where they should open outward. He may prepare an order requiring the alteration of the doors. If he cannot personally see the occupant of the factory, the man who employs the workers there, he may deliver the order to the person in charge during the employer's absence. If no such person is to be found and there is no caretaker, the order may be posted in a conspicuous place on the building and it will be considered served.

Another way in which the order may be served is to mail it to the last known post office address of the occupant of the premises.

In these and a score of other ways legislation is tending to better the condition of factory workers. Their wages are protected from money lenders to a certain degree, immigrants are protected against the fraudulent sale of worthless coupons represented to be railroad tickets, and heavy penalties are attached to be violation of employment agency laws which protect the laborer against false statements made by agents.

Statistics compiled by the Labor Commission show that last year there were fewer disputes between labor unions and employers and that less idleness resulted from strikes. This may very possibly indicate that not only are conditions for factory workers becoming better, but that employers and workers are beginning to see that conditions are interchangeable.

A man who employs more than a thousand laborers in a factory in New York said a few days ago:—"Let them legislate to make better conditions for the workers. Wise legislation in that direction is a grand thing. The more comfortable my employes are, the better they are protected, the more and better work they will do. My efforts are to keep ahead of the Legislature, but if they can point the way to improve still further I shall be glad to follow."

FASHION DECREES

(Short Story)

By H. Bernard Handle.

What might be called the first rift in the lute appeared when Doris turned out in a cart wheel hat. Doris is well rounded and pretty. She stands just about five feet, and she is not at all the type of girl to carry off a tremendous hat. After skipping into the gutter a dozen times to allow unoffending people to pass, I ventured to tell her so.

"It's the fashion," she returned with a merry little laugh.

"Well, if I were a pretty girl I shouldn't give a hang for silly fashions," I said. "I should just wear the things which suited me best."

"Oh, indeed," she laughed again. "And what would be your idea for little me?"

"On a hot summer day like this one of those pretty washable frocks of muslin or linen, with a neat sailor hat," I returned. "I can picture you looking absolutely adorable just like that!"

"If you were a girl you'd want to be right up to the latest from Paris," she declared.

"It beats me why," I said. "No man of any sense would make himself ridiculous by some extraordinary get-up. It must be a peculiar disease to which the feminine gender is susceptible." I noticed that she appeared to be biting her lip, but, being wishful to let her clearly understand my views, went on deliberately.

"I'm aware there are male freaks to be seen about who sport ultramarine socks, orange coloured vests, and things like that," I said. "But one can only be sorry for the limited intelligence of those effiminate beggars. That conceited idiot, Lavender, is a fair specimen——"

"Gus Lavender is a very nice fellow," Doris declared.

"Gus Lavender is going to get a thick ear one of these days," I said. "He'd have something to say to that if you tried," she retorted. "He's a gentleman, at any rate."

"Nothing could afford me greater pleasure than a dust-up with the gentleman," I returned. "But you'd find precious little fight in a mother's darling who wears his hair over his collar and sports pink socks and yellow shoes."

"All the same, I shall wear it," she said, apropos of the hat. And as there was nothing gained by further argument in her then stubborn mood, I simply let the protest stand at that. The actual break came when she appeared in a hobble skirt. As I have said, Doris is plump and rather short. Doris in a hobble was food for ribald laughter. Being very fond of her, I threw out delicate hints to that effect.

I confess that what appealed to me in Doris was as much her amiability and jolly disposition as her accomplishments and undeniable good looks, but at my disapproval she stood revealed in a new light. While she stepped along beside me—three paces to my one—I was given tempestuously to understand that I was an old stick, in my everlasting blue serge, who would look all the better for a little smartening up.

What did a man know about dress? Madame Dupres, who, I must know, had made a special exception in her case to her rule of only making for old and regular customers, had decreed that hers was the ideal figure for the hobble, and she wasn't going to be dictated to as to what she should wear. She wore her clothes to please herself. So there! Now above all things, I pride myself on my neat appearance. In my humble opinion nothing looks better on a chap than a well cut long serge suit, with a straw hat. Consequently, I resented her remark.

"What is your idea for my type of masculine beauty, Miss Looker?" I asked with a bit of sting. "Possibly you would like to see me in a velvet jacket, yellow vest, and riding breeches, like that conceited ass Lavender. Riding breeches on a chap who's never likely to own any horse but a clothes horse—and that on the hire system."

"At any rate, he has manners!" retorted Doris. Any approval of Lavender from Doris always got me raw. The glib-tongued noodle, although knowing perfectly well that we were as good as engaged, had the dashed cheek to try and cut me out. He never lost an opportunity. I had promised myself the satisfaction of a short and merry give-and-take with Mr. Augustus Lavender for quite a long time.

As luck would have it, the bounder strutted into view while we were in the middle of the argument. Hat in hand, and grinning like a chimpanzee, he approached us.

"By Jove, Doris, you look positively stunnin'!" he observed. The frown passed from her face at this treacly speech as if by magic.

"Mr. Hoskins thinks I look a freak," she laughed. He looked me up and down as if at a curiosity, and leisurely lit a cigarette.

"If 'Oskins has any objections to walking with you, I'm disengaged," he drawled. Possibly I was a fool for letting myself boil over but the confounded cheek of the fellow robbed me of my usual control.

"You'd look a very pretty pair," I declared, with a laugh meant to be nasty. Doris flushed at that, and her nose went up.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Hoskins," she said, flashing upon me a look of expressive scorn.

"So long, Hoskins," said Augustus. "Glad you don't mind."

Without any more palaver, they went off together, leaving me white with fury. If ever a chap invited serious trouble, that chap was Lavender; but the staggering fact that Doris had let me down shamefully held me helpless in savage resentment. I had been horribly deceived in Doris. There and then I told myself that a girl who could behave so outrageously wasn't worth a further thought, and in my righteous anger, was busily typing, and while presumably consulting her on some matter of business, asked her in a whisper if Lavender had stated the truth.

"Outside business, I've nothing to say to you," she returned.

In passing me a moment or so of humble pie. She passed me with an icy stare and her nose in the air.

On the Monday morning when she entered the office, I met her with a smile, prepared to eat the full dose though my fingers itched to spoil his features, I was forced to grin; but at the first opportunity I went to the room where she, with the other girls, Later Lavender took occasion to inform me that Doris and he were going that night to the theatre. Al- later the chief remarked on my white face. I felt white, but did not tell him that, what he ascribed to the trying weather, was the evidence of consuming fury. One little word, the least sign of relenting, would have primed me to put that snob Lavender in chancery any time during the next three weeks; but as far as she was concerned, I did not exist. Although I assumed an expression of the sublimest indifference, and showed it, as I hoped, by an orgie of flirting, I must confess that jealousy filled me at sight of them together.

People would turn at seeing Doris in her hobble and big hat, and the clown in his outrageous get-up, together on the street, and would laugh of pass remarks to each other as to the funny sights one can see free of charge. How long the bounder might have been privileged to make the running I do not know, but in a happy hour fashion decreed that the hobble had had its day, and Madame Dupres—who boasted to be the second cousin in the Rue de la Paix—turned her attention to the jupe ecourtee.

For the benefit of the unenlightened, the jupe ecourtee, I would explain, is a skirt fitting rather tightly and cut short above the ankles, according to the inclination of the wearer. It is generally worn with lavender or grey coloured stockings and beribboned shoes. Fate chooses strange instruments at times to work her destined ends, and I have really no quarrel with the particular abbreviated skirt that Doris, in her desire to be right up to Paris, wore that eventful Saturday afternoon. She was accompanied by the bounder, of course. My recollection of his get-up on this occasion is somewhat hazy, but I fancy it was a conglomeration of baggy riding breeches, tight brown leggings, scarlet plush vest, hunting stock, velveteen jacket, Tyrolean hat and a whangee cane. The fun commenced with a derisive "cooee!" from a snub-nosed boy, and when he was joined by one or two more of his kidney, who hung on their heels with jeers and cat calls, it struck me that Mudborough was not exactly ripe for advanced notions of Madame Dupres, and, at a little distance, I also followed.

The cry of "Harem!" was taken up, and soon a gang of fifty yelling young ones were following them. The swagger of that egregious ass Lavender added to their delight. They put on a spurt. The pack yelped the closer after them. They stopped and turned, white to the lips, and very near tears. Doris stayed while her gallant harangued the encircling tormentors with violent antics. Some one jostled him in the ribs, and the ass completely lost his head. One moment I saw him with cane uplifted; the next, his hat was in the gutter.

The prospect for Doris looked disagreeable, and as the aggressor squared up, I strode nearer. Lavender had no stomach for such a fight. He regarded his burly, hard-featured assailant with one look of terror, and not to put too fine a point on it, did not stay for further argument.

At a run I was by her side. I took her arm and pressed it reassuringly. Heedless of the jeers and yelling, I urged her forward. Luck favoured me. A motor car running empty, save for the driver, advanced swiftly along the road. Up went my hand, and, as he stayed in curiosity, I nipped her into it like a shot and followed. The chauffeur was a decent chap who wanted no telling. In a few seconds the booing crowd was left behind us.

When we reached her home she tearfully insisted that I should come in. While I explained the affair to her mother, she disappeared upstairs. In five minutes—perhaps a little longer—she showed up again. I smiled to see her. The jupe ecourtee and the toilet basin hat had been discarded. In their place she wore a blue linen dress and a sailor hat. The colour had come back to her pretty face. She looked simply adorable. And as she put her two hands into mine, I told her so.

CASCARETS WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Salts, Calomel and Cathartic Pills Are Violent—They Act on Bowels as Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Take a Cascaret to-night and thoroughly cleanse your Liver, Stomach and Bowels, and you will surely feel great by morning. You men and women who have headache, coated tongue, can't sleep, are bilious with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have headache and feel all worn out.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the decomposed waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels.

Remember, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. A 10-cent box from your druggist means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children.

A Splendid Work

Ruth Cameron, who writes the daily "Chit-Chat" articles for the Examiner, has just published her splendid articles in beautiful book form. Miss Cameron calls her book "Chit-Chat." It is a 200 page book, illustrated by William Stevens, and contains 160 of the favourite articles of Miss Cameron's vast multitude of admirers.

Miss Cameron is said to have the largest daily audience of any woman writer in the world, her articles being read by more than 8,000,000 people throughout the United States and Canada.

"Chit-Chat" is an exhortation to cheerfulness and obliging readiness. In it, there is a reminder of the courtesy which is so sweet from youth to elders; a warning against hasty temper, malicious gossip, or frivolous spending of time and money.

Ruth Cameron's good, wholesome character building talks hold up a standard of happy and considerate conduct of life to all of us. We cannot read "Chit-Chat" without being bettered thereby, helped to think on a higher plane, to live by a more unselfish ideal, and to avoid even the appearance of evil by better heeding the proprieties.

Ruth Camron is a cultured woman of unusual intellect—a character full of human sympathies and understandings. Her publisher is George Matthew Adams, Chicago.

The book has a splendid cover design, which includes a pen portrait of Miss Cameron. It makes a splendid holiday gift book. Doubtless many of the readers of the Examiner who have been scrap-booking Miss Cameron's articles, will be delighted to learn that they can get her writings in this beautiful book form.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system.
THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.
THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

If ever a chap invited serious trouble, that chap was Lavender; but the staggering fact that Doris had let me down shamefully held me helpless in savage resentment. I had been horribly deceived in Doris. There and then I told myself that a girl who could behave so outrageously wasn't worth a further thought, and in my righteous anger, was busily typing, and while presumably consulting her on some matter of business, asked her in a whisper if Lavender had stated the truth.

"Outside business, I've nothing to say to you," she returned.

In passing me a moment or so of humble pie. She passed me with an icy stare and her nose in the air.

On the Monday morning when she entered the office, I met her with a smile, prepared to eat the full dose though my fingers itched to spoil his features, I was forced to grin; but at the first opportunity I went to the room where she, with the other girls, Later Lavender took occasion to inform me that Doris and he were going that night to the theatre. At later the chief remarked on my white face. I felt white, but did not tell him that, what he ascribed to the trying weather, was the evidence of consuming fury. One little word, the least sign of relenting, would have primed me to put that snob Lavender in chancery any time during the next three weeks; but as far as she was concerned, I did not exist. Although I assumed an expression of the sublimest indifference, and showed it, as I hoped, by an orgie of flirting, I must confess that jealousy filled me at sight of them together.

People would turn at seeing Doris in her hobble and big hat, and the clown in his outrageous get-up, together on the street, and would laugh or pass remarks to each other as to the funny sights one can see free of charge. How long the bounder might have been privileged to make the running I do not know, but in a happy hour fashion decreed that the hobble had had its day, and Madame Dupres—who boasted to be the second cousin in the Rue de la Paix—turned her attention to the jupe ecourtee.

For the benefit of the unenlightened, the jupe ecourtee, I would explain, is a skirt fitting rather tightly and cut short above the ankles, according to the inclination of the wearer. It is generally worn with lavender or grey coloured stockings and beribboned shoes. Fate chooses strange instruments at times to work her destined ends, and I have really no quarrel with the particular abbreviated skirt that Doris, in her desire to be right up to Paris, wore that eventful Saturday afternoon. She was accompanied by the bounder, of course. My recollection of his get-up on this occasion is somewhat hazy, but I fancy it was a conglomeration of baggy riding breeches, tight brown leggings, scarlet plush vest, hunting stock, velveteen jacket, Tyrolean hat and a whangee cane. The fun commenced with a derisive "cooee!" from a snub-nosed boy, and when he was joined by one or two more of his kidney, who hung on their heels with jeers and cat calls, it struck me that Mudborough was not exactly ripe for advanced notions of Madame Dupres, and, at a little distance, I also followed.

The cry of "Harem!" was taken up, and soon a gang of fifty yelling young ones were following them. The swagger of that egregious ass Lavender added to their delight. They put on a spurt. The pack yelped the closer after them. They stopped and turned, white to the lips, and very near tears. Doris stayed while her gallant harangued the encircling tormentors with violent antics. Some one jostled him in the ribs, and the ass completely lost his head. One moment I saw him with cane uplifted; the next, his hat was in the gutter.

The prospect for Doris looked disagreeable, and as the aggressor squared up, I strode nearer. Lavender had no stomach for such a fight. He regarded his burly, hard-featured assailant with one look of terror, and not to put too fine a point on it, did not stay for further argument.

At a run I was by her side. I took her arm and pressed it reassuringly. Heedless of the jeers and yelling, I urged her forward. Luck favoured me. A motor car running empty, save for the driver, advanced swiftly along the road. Up went my hand, and, as he stayed in curiosity, I nipped her into it like a shot and followed. The chauffeur was a decent chap who wanted no telling. In a few seconds the booing crowd was left behind us.

When we reached her home she tearfully insisted that I should come in. While I explained the affair to her mother, she disappeared upstairs. In five minutes—perhaps a little longer—she showed up again. I smiled to see her. The jupe ecourtee and the toilet basin hat had been discarded. In their place she wore a blue linen dress and a sailor hat. The colour had come back to her pretty face. She looked simply adorable. And as she put her two hands into mine, I told her so.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system.

THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

CASCARETS WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Salts, Calomel and Cathartic Pills Are Violent—They Act on Bowels as Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Take a Cascaret to-night and thoroughly cleanse your Liver, Stomach and Bowels, and you will surely feel great by morning. You men and women who have headache, coated tongue, can't sleep, are bilious with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have headache and feel all worn out.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the decomposed waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels.

Remember, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. A 10-cent box from your druggist means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children.

A Splendid Work

Ruth Cameron, who writes the daily "Chit-Chat" articles for the Examiner, has just published her splendid articles in beautiful book form. Miss Cameron calls her book "Chit-Chat." It is a 200 page book, illustrated by William Stevens, and contains 160 of the favourite articles of Miss Cameron's vast multitude of admirers.

Miss Cameron is said to have the largest daily audience of any woman writer in the world, her articles being read by more than 8,000,000 people throughout the United States and Canada.

"Chit-Chat" is an exhortation to cheerfulness and obliging readiness. In it, there is a reminder of the courtesy which is so sweet from youth to elders; a warning against hasty temper, malicious gossip, or frivolous spending of time and money.

Ruth Cameron's good, wholesome character building talks hold up a standard of happy and considerate conduct of life to all of us. We cannot read "Chit-Chat" without being bettered thereby, helped to think on a higher plane, to live by a more unselfish ideal, and to avoid even the appearance of evil by better heeding the proprieties.

Ruth Camron is a cultured woman of unusual intellect—a character full of human sympathies and understandings. Her publisher is George Matthew Adams, Chicago.

The book has a splendid cover design, which includes a pen portrait of Miss Cameron. It makes a splendid holiday gift book. Doubtless many of the readers of the Examiner who have been scrap-booking Miss Cameron's articles, will be delighted to learn that they can get her writings in this beautiful book form.

TWO PERISH.

Steamer Goes Ashore Near Port Colborne.

Port Colborne, Ont., Dec. 1.—The steamer Raleigh, loaded with pulpwood from Quebec to Erie, is ashore at Point Abeno, about seven miles east of here, and if fast going to pieces. Mr. Wise, of Cleveland, who was the steward, and his wife, who was the cook, were drowned in trying to make the shore in yawl boats. One of the boats capsized.

William Pritchard, of Cleveland, the engineer, would not leave the ship and when she was broken up he clung desperately to a few rafters and boards that were still joined together. The heavy seas made it impossible for lifeboats to put out to his rescue and at a late hour it was feared he would be drowned before help reached him.

Several men from Port Colborne, who were patroling the beach, waded out with lines and rescued the crew of twelve men. They are all being cared for at a farm house at Sherkston.

After battling with the terrific seas all night and all day, and sending out signals of distress, the Raleigh broke her rudder and was rendered helpless. She ran ashore opposite the Empire Limstone Co.'s works.

Pieces of cordwood are floating in towards the shore in hundreds, and the beach is already lined with them.

The steamer is owned by Henry Wiseman, jr., of Detroit, and was in charge of Captain H. L. Beauvais.

Anchors Didn't Hold.

Buffalo, Dec. 1.—The Raleigh left Port Colborne at six o'clock Wednesday night with a cargo of pulpwood for Erie, Pa. There was a high wind and a heavy sea when the steamer put out from the Canadian shore, and conditions grew worse during the night. Early yesterday morning the steamer's steering gear became disabled. Both anchors were lowered, but they failed to hold on the sandy bottom and the Raleigh was carried toward Point Abino by the stiff northwest wind.

Captain Beauvais and his crew fought desperately to keep the disabled steamer in midlake, but when the boiler room became flooded by the tons of water shipped in by the heavy seas, they were helpless. At dawn the Raleigh crashed on the rocks.

Nine members of the crew of twelve succeeded in getting ashore and were cared for in the huts at the Empire Limestone Co.'s quarries near Sherkston. Employes of the quarries and the survivors were unsuccessful in their efforts to rescue Engineer Pritchard, who at last reports, was still adrift.

Strike-Breakers Quit.

Montreal, Dec. 1.—Wilfrid Paquette, representative of the textile workers, who has been conducting the strike of the Dominion Textile Workers at Magog, returned yesterday and stated that the men whom the company sent to Magog to replace the men on strike had returned to town on learning that a strike was in progress.

Wire Used By State?

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 1.—A bit of twisted wire dangling from an upper window yesterday led to an investigation by counsel defending Jas. B. McNamara, and the attorneys became convinced that the walls of the Los Angeles county jails have ears which heard many confidential speeches.

The wire runs from a window in an unoccupied cell room on the third floor of the jail to another unoccupied room on the second floor.

Visitors to Ortie E. McManigal, one of the state's main witnesses, saw McManigal in an upper room from which the wire dangles.

A detective and perhaps a stenographer were in the lower room, but for all practical purposes, it is said, the wire placed them in hearing of persons who talked to McManigal while the grand jury was in session. This is the declaration of the defence, which has no documentary evidence except a piece of the wire.

Port Huron Y.M.C.A. Fired.

Port Huron, Mich., Dec. 1.—Geo. Walker, aged 26 years is under arrest here charged with attempted arson in connection with fires at the railroad Y.M.C.A. building here on Nov. 20. Six fires have been started at the Y.M.C.A. building since last May, and five have occurred at the Evanston (Ill.) Y.M.C.A. building during the same period.

The police claim that Walker, who is a Grand Trunk Railway fireman, running between this city and Chicago, and who resides in Battle Creek, was in the respective cities at the time of the several fires. He pleaded not guilty when arraigned in the police court, and was held for examination in $1,000 bonds.

Berlin's Big Metal Strike.

Berlin, Germany, Dec. 1.—A lockout of 70,000 workers in the metal trades became effective last night, ensuing on their refusal to accept an agreement drawn up by a joint committee of employers and trade unionists. The lockout is the outcome of the failure to settle a strike started in October last by 4,000 metal workers.

There was comparatively little doing in the commodity markets on this continent to-day, the Chicago and American Northwest grain exchanges being closed for the holiday, and the Winnipeg market moving along in an apathetic manner, owing to the removal of the influence of the big American wheat centres.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Nov. 30.—Altho this was a holiday in the United States there was no let-up in the demand from continental buyers for Manitoba spring wheat and at prices which were 1½c to 2c per bushel higher than the prices bid from the United Kingdom. Altho there is little or no ocean going grain to be had from Portland and West St. John, to the continent, exporters are working a fair amount of business and booking their freight from United States ports.

The local demand for American No. 3 yellow is fair and sales of cariots to arrive at 73½c per bushel, track. Demand for malting barley has fallen away and prices have declined. There is a good demand for oats from outside points. The local and outside trade in spring wheat flour is quieter, owing to the fact that buyers are now fairly well filled up for the present and millers claim there is no improvement in the export business. An active trade is being done in bran and shorts.

Cheese is quiet, but firm. Butter is strong under a good demand. Eggs fairly active. Potatoes strong under good demand at advance of 5c per bag. Provision trade fair.

Provinces Control Films.

Ottawa, Dec. 1.—The Dominion Government has refused to interfere in the censorship of motion pictures, now under the control of the various Provincial Governments of the country.

This was the reply made to the State Department of the United States, which through Hon. J. G. Foster, U.S. Consul-General here, asked that the recent drastic order of the Ontario board of censors with reference to the refusal to allow the exhibition of films showing the American flag, be reconsidered.

Mawson to Beautify Ottawa.

Ottawa, Dec. 1.—The Government has set itself to the task of beautifying the city of Ottawa. It is understood that the present improvement commission will be disbanded immediately. It is also understood that the Government has reached an agreement with Mr. Thomas Mawson, the well-known English authority on city planning and landscape gardening and lecturer on landscape design at the University of Liverpool, whereby Mr. Mawson will act in the capacity of a commissioner for the Government with the authority to organize and carry into effect a great scheme for the beautification of the capital.

Archbishop Consecrated.

Kingston, Dec. 1.—A scene of imposing grandeur was presented at St. Mary's Cathedral yesterday morning on the occasion of the consecration of Rev. Father Michael J. Spratt as archbishop of Kingston. The edifice was filled to the doors with members of the congregation and church dignitaries from many places in Canada.

Leaden Water Pipes.

The use of lead pipes for conveying drinking water is being regarded with some disfavor by Paris health authorities. Dependence has been placed on the formation of lead sulphate and lead carbonate on the surface, preventing any dissolving of lead in the water, but further investigation shows that the protective coating is long in forming and is easily displaced by a shock, such as water hammer action. Copper pipe is recommended, as the copper salts likely to be dissolved in the water are slightly if at all harmful. Copper is expensive, however, and another suggestion is the use of aluminium pipe.

Tommy Agreed.

Tommy had been tardy at school and this was the excuse he handed in:

"miss M'Inerney pleas Exkuse tommy for Being late he was Kep out on account of Sixness in the Fambly yours Respect Nicodemus Tucker."

"Thomas," said the teacher after she had read it, "I have serious doubts about the genuineness of this. It looks very suspicious."

"I know it, ma'am," he replied, sniffing. "I told paw I could write better'n he could, but he would do it."—London Answers.

PUTS THE SOFT PEDAL ON THE HYDRO'S PROMISES

Mr. Hall Tells Bridgenorth Where the Beck Bluff Breaks Down---Mr. Goodwill Tells How Much it Costs to Become a Teacher Under the Whitney Rules.

The electors of Bridgenorth celebrated St. Andrew's night last night by turning out in goodly numbers to hear Mr. R. R. Hall and Mr. E. L. Goodwill discuss the campaign issues. Although many of the men are away in the lumber camps, the town hall was well filled and there was a sprinkling of the fair sex present.

Although both speakers covered the ground pretty throughly the audience was chiefly interested in bilingual schools, Model schools and Workman's Compensation Act. A good education at cheap cost for the children is something that comes home to every parent in country or city. The Workman's Compensation Act touches the rural communities, because many farmers have sons or brothers employed in the factory towns nearby, who are injuriously affected by the defective operation of the Act.

Calls Them Muddled Schools.

"I think," said Chairman Telford, in his opening remarks, "that the abolition of the Model schools was an awful mistake. It has brought about confusion and inefficiency. Model schools! Why they ought to call them muddled schools.'

Which prompted R. . Hall to take up the school question first. Mr. Hall quoted the latest stage of the bilingual squabble in the cabinet.

Sir James Whitney, you will remember, says there are no bilingual schools in Ontario. Attorney General Foy say if there are any such they must conform to the law. The Hon. Dr. Reaume said only the other night that Attorney General Foy was talking through his hat, or words to that effect, and that it was only those places that didn't have bilingual schools that didn't appreciate their virtues. Also Dr. Pyne denies that he expressed any wish that English be the mother tongue of every child in Ontario. What with denials, equivocations, contradictions and slips of the tongue Sir James Whitney and his cabinet ministers have got themselves badly hailed up."

"Meanwhile," continued Mr. Hall, "Dr. Merchant has been nine months inspecting the three hundred bilingual schools which exist in Ontario, and his report hasn't been published yet."

The Evidence of Guilt.

"And here," said Mr. Hall, spreading out the exhibit, "is the set of readers used in these bilingual schools. You needn't believe me. Believe your eyes. The four readers used in the primary classes. Four—count 'em—four. And yet Sir James Whitney has the nerve to get up and say that no such thing as a bilingual school exists in Ontario. Remember, that it's only Sir James that says that. His colleagues wouldn't have the face. Fry says they may exist and so does Pyne, and Dr. Reaume says they do, and the sphinx-like Mr. Hanna, who stirred up this controversy in the first place, remains silent -but silence gives consent."

The Tragedy in Handshakes.

"Yes, gentlemen," said Mr. Hall, "there is no doubt you have bilingual schools saddled on you in Ontario. Bluster as Sir James will, he can't get away from the facts. Sir James has the unfortunate habit of thinking that his swollen majority gives any rash utterance of his the weight of truth."

Mr. Hall aroused the sympathetic interest of the audience when he related some cases of hardship under the present defective Workman's Compensation Act.

"I am in the midst of an election campaign," said Mr. Hall, "and I do a great deal of hand shaking. What strikes me and saddens me at the same time is the number of hands I shake in Peterborough from which the thumb or one, two or three fingers are missing. Chewed off in a machine. No compensation for the loss of all that working capital. It is a tragedy whatever way you look at it."

Putting the Soft Pedal On.

Coming to local matters, Mr. Hall took up the latest phase of the Hydro-Electric bluff about coming to Peterborough.

"I notice in the Review to-night," said Mr. Hall, "a long editorial headed Trent Canal Power. I am glad that the Review has seen reason. This editorial not only saves the Review's face, but preserves its reputation for sanity which its power statements were rapidly losing it. I hesitate to call this a backdown on the part of the Review—for editors never back down, of course—but I congratulate the Review on putting the soft pedal on the irresponsible jubilation it showed when it first heard that the Hydro-Electric was coming to Peterborough to spend a million and generate twenty thousand horse power."

"I notice now," said Mr. Hall, "that the Review chides the Toronto News and Adam Beck for extravagant boasting, when they say that twenty to twenty-five thousand horse power can be developed at Dams No. 4 and 5. As a matter of fact the report of their own engineer," Cecil B. Smith, shows that Dams No. 4 and 5 develop, separately 2280 horse power and might, under one head, develop 4,000 horse power."

"I don't wonder," 'exclaimed Mr. Hall, "that the Review tells the Toronto News to come out of its trance and gets its facts right. When you hear any more Hydro-Electric tall talk, just remember this case and then you will know that it is just about ten per cent. true.

What Teaching Costs Now.

Mr. Goodwill took up the Model school question from the two viewpoints—its effect on education, its effect on the farmer's pocket. Mr. Goodwill was a country school teacher once himself and went through a Model school and knows experimentally what he is talking about.

"In the good old day," said Mr. Goodwill, "when Model schools flourished, it was a matter of five or six weeks in the summer, after which your son or daughter would be ready to take up school teaching in September with a certificate good for three years and plenty of time to save up money and put themselves through college if they wished."

"Now, owing to the expense of Normal schools, board and tuition, it costs more money than you can afford to train your children as properly certified teachers."

"What," 'asked Chairman Telford, "is that expense. I heard it said it was $1200."

"Well," said Mr. Goodwill, "it might be a $1,000, but I believe we are away within the margin when we say $600."

"And what happens," continued Mr. Goodwill. "In order to pay back their fathers that six or seven or eight hundred dollars our properly certificated teachers go to the Northwest where they can earn big salaries and leave the little red school house in Ontario to shift as best it can. That's what abolishing Model schools has done. It has made a teacher's education costly. It has sent them to distant fields where they can get back the capital invested more quickly. It has drained Ontario of good teachers, and has left the country school house, except in very prosperous school sections, the culls."

The meeting closed with cheers for the king and the candidate.

PERSIA REFUSES

Will Not Dismiss American Who is Treasurer of Persia at the Request of Russia

TROUBLE EXPECTED

TEHERAN, PERSIA, DEC. 1.—By an almost unanimous vote, the Persian Government this morning refused to comply with Russia's demand for the dismissal of M. Morgan Shuster, the United States man who, for several months has held the post of Persian Treasurer General, and has greatly offended the Russian Government by his policies. Troops have already been despatched by Russia and the situation is critical. The position of Great Britain, United States, and other powers in regard to this matter, is very indefinite.

Persia is already plunged into a reign of terror, following the decision of the National Assembly this morning, to resist the demands of Russia. Ala Ed Howleh, the former Provincial Governor, and leader of those who would give into Russia, and dismiss Shuster, sent word to the Assembly before the vote was taken, not to consider him, but to vote in the best interests of the nation, but so great was Shuster's personal influence and popularity, that they refused to dismiss him. Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey, of Great Britain, cabled the Assembly, advising compliance to Russia's demand. Shuster is virtually the Shah and dictator of Persia. Russian troops are to-day crossing the border for the purpose of taking Teheran.

ORANGE SENTINEL DESPATCH

TORONTO, DEC. 1.—The Sentinel the organ of the Orange Order, comes out to-day advising the Borden Government to adopt a policy of presenting a number of super Dreadnoughts to Great Britain, building them of Canadian material, by Canadian workmen, in Canadian shipbuilding yards. This, according to the Sentinel, is the only policy that would find favour in Canada, which wouldn't vote favourably on a referendum for a separate navy or for direct contribution.

COMPENSATION ACT THAT COMPENSATES FACTORY INSPECTION ACT THAT INSPECTS

Mr. R. R. Hall stands for the Twin Guardians—a Workman's Compensation Act that compensates, and a Factory Inspection Act that inspects.

The two together form a complete system of workman's rights. Together they stand and divided they fall.

To amend the Workman's Compensation Act without amending the Factory Act is to deal with the effect and neglect the cause.

If the Factory Inspection Act really does its work there will be less need of calling on the Workman's Compensation Act.

The Workman's Compensation Act merely locks the stable door after the horse has been stolen. The Factory Inspection Act keeps the horse from being stolen.

In plain words, a Factory Inspection Act, properly enforced, would prevent the majority of accidents that now take place.

The right kind of Factory Inspection Act will provide for enough Factory Inspectors to make freqeunt inspections and see that their recommendations are carried out.

It will see to it that safeguards are not employed which may turn out in practice more dangerous to life than the unprotected machinery.

It will see that when proper safegaurds are removed for any reason—when machinery is being cleaned or repaired for example—they will be replaced in time to prevent accidents.

What is wanted is a Workman's Compensation Act that involves no lawsuits and court costs and a Factory Inspection Act that means what it says.

Facts That Suggest Wisdom Of Serious Consideration

When the Whitney Government boasts of the increase of revenue received in Ontario during the seven years of its regime, it is an idle boast, and when analyzed reflects little credit on the Government. It would be a queer province indeed which during a period of the greatest prosperity the Dominion has ever had, could not show some reflection of that prosperity in increased revenue. It is a fact that about nine-tenths of the increase revenue is desrived from sources of revenue adopted by Liberals and opposed by Conservatives, who have in this matter reaped where they have not sown. Ontario has done so, but it is a question whether or not the province has held its own in the increased demands made upon its treasury. In the first instance, Ontario's revenue increase in 1910, which amounted to nearly three million dollars, was the direct result, with the exception of $300,000, of former Liberal legislation.

The Conservatives in other words simply took office; abused their predecessors, promised scandals which they never produced, and rested on their oars while Ontario's revenue provided for by their opponents, came rolling in; and made life easy. While the revenue increased the spending powers of the Government also developed abnormally, and despite the fact that the revenue increase between 1904 and 1910 was $2,762,646, and there is another increase this year, Hon. Mr. Matheson has announced that he hopes to have an even balance sheet for 1911.

Analyzing the situation a little more closely it is found that the Conservatives have readily eaten up all the magnificent revenue increase and at the same time have no big undertakings to show for the expenditure of the money. Sir James Whitney himself has announced that proper colonization of Ontario North was not carried out because it would not pay, a point where Sir James is all wrong. What public works show where the Whitney administration has been able to lose the enormous increases provided to it by former Liberal education? There are practically none.

The fact of the matter is the Government has been prodigal with its friends. The increase in the cost of the civil service has advanced 65 per cent. Whitney appointments all over the province have carried salary increases, sometimes abnormally high.

The Government in brief has passed scarcely any revenuse producing legislation except to make itself a sharer in barroom receipts. While it has done nothing to increase the revenue, it has spent the people's money like water in an effort to appease the hungering calls of party patronage. It is a Government which has served party and not province and deserves to be turned out.

CITY'S POSITION IN RAPID TOOL COMPANY MATTER

City Solicitor Hall Reports to the Finance Committee, Taking Up the Whole Negotiations With the Company ---How the Situation Stands at Present.

The Legal committee held a meeting last night previous to the Property committee, when the following were present: Ald. Graham, chairman, Mayor Morrow, Ald. Kerneghan, Ald. Bradburn.

The claim of Mrs. Milborrow, who sustained a broken ankle from a fall on a defective sidewalk on Driscoll Terrace, and also the claim of Mr. J. R. Scott, who sustained severe injuries from being run down by a horse and vehicle in the dark on an East City street, were discussed but no action was taken.

On motion of Mayor M ow, seconded by Ald. Kerneghan, the matter of the accounts of D. Belleghem and Jas. Akey, were left with the chairman with power to act, and the City Treasurer authorized to pay them the amount ordered by the chairman.

Rapid Tool Co. Matter.

The matter of the Rapid Tool Co. was also discussed at some length. The city solicitor made a report regarding the company. He pointed out the action that the city should take in protecting its interests in the event of the Company attempting to sell the property.

He stated in his report that on the 30th of September last the Mayor was served with a notice given by the holders of a $1600 mortgage, W. G. Ferguson and G. L. Haye, on the Rapid Tool Co., stating that if the amount due on it was not paid, the land would be sold.

On the 4th of October, Mr. Hall city solicitor, wrote Mr. F. Morris, assignee of the company, notifying him of this statement and suggesting that he should notify Messrs. Ferguson and Hay of the fact, that in their deed to the company, they covenanted that the land was free from encumbrances and they should pay off this mortgage and also notifying him that under the terms of By-law No. 1314 and the agreement on the breach of any of the terms of the by-law, the city was entitled to the land, buildings and plant, which should become the property of the city unless the company pay the city $1200 and that the city would not allow the land, buildings or plant or any part of it to be removed or disposed of until the city was settled with. Mr. Hall also attended two meetings of the creditors of the company and asserted the same claim. He understands that up to the present the assignee has not been able to induce Messrs. Ferguson and Hay to pay off this mortgage to the city, and that it is asserted on Mr. Ferguson's behalf that he never intended to pay it off, and that the company purchased the land subject to the mortgage. Mr. Hall states that this is quite inconsistent with the form of the deed and also with the terms of the resolution of the directors.

Mr. Hall requested that authority be given to the mayor, chairman of the Legal committee or the Legal committee, to take such action as may be necessary to protect the city's interests in the event of the attempted disposal of the property of the company without the consent of the city. No definite action was taken.

Property Committee Has Another Session on Public Library Problem—Contractors Say They Are Blameless

CITY'S PROPOSITION

At a meeting of the Property Committee, held last night, the Library Board asked for some extra fixtures, in the form of tables, chairs, a typewriter, and book racks, Ald. Duncan Chairman, stated that there was only $100.00 of the Carnegie fund left, and a few accounts against that, but he thought there would be about $30.00, or $40.00 left after these accounts were paid, and on motion, it was decided that this amount be handed over to the Library Board, to purchase their own supplies.

Pillars of the Library.

The old, worn-out subject of the pillars of the Public Library loomed up in the limelight once more. The Rutherford Bros. were present. The Contractors claimed that the columns were as straight as they could be built with the Don Valley brick, called for in the contract.

Mr. Rutherford said that there were few persons who would have noticed them had not the attention of the Committee been called to the matter. Mr. Thos. Rutherford said that he and his brother had been prevented from proceeding with the work for six months, on account of the heating apparatus not being in a working order. He said that in the specifications the heating apparatus should have been installed in November, 1910, and they had been at a loss during that time through having to retain 60 degrees of heat in the building, in accordance with their contract.

Mr. Blackwell, the architect, was present, and in reply to a question from the Committee, stated that the pillars might be improved by covering with Roman stone, this costing about $150.00'.

"It is up to the Architects to pay for remedying the crooked columns," said Ald. Morgan.

Mr. Blackwell thought that he was free of all responsibility, as he had nothing to do with the brick work. Mr. Belcher being in charge of the brick construction. He thought that the builders were responsible for the poor work, and not the architects.

Mr. Belcher was unable to be present on account of sickness.

Mr. T. Rutherford stated that Mr. Belcher wanted him and his brother, to swell the columns, while, at the same time, neither of the architects had notifiedthem previously of anything being wrong in their work.

Mr. Bogue had a contract with the Rutherford Bros., for the brick work, and the latter are holding back $150 of Mr. Bogue's account, until they secure their $300.00 from the city.

Then after considerable argument, and after the builders had blankly refused to take the columns down, on the ground that they could not be rebuilt any better with that kind of brick, a proposition was offered to the effect that the Rutherford Bros. be paid the $300.00 with the understanding that they would cover the columns with Roman stone, or that they be paid $150.00 in full of account, and be not asked to take further action in the matter. Rutherford Bros. would not accept either proposition, on the ground that the cost of covering the pillars would be more than $150.00, and then they had Mr. Bogue's account of $150, so that they might as well leave the matter as it is, and endeavour to get their money in some other way.

The question was again left over, but this time only for a few days, in which time Rutherford Bros. will consider the above proposition of the Committee.

There were present Ald. Duncan, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Ald. Graham, Morgan, Brown, Bradburn, and the City Solicitor, Mr. E. H. D. Hall; also the brick work contractor and architect.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, DEC. 1, 1911

HOLD BACK AND HOLD UP.

Sir James Whitney is an adept at the hold-back game—holding back advance legislation and administrative reform. He has held back tax-reform; held back, by his apathy, tuberculosis treatment reform; he has held back improvement of the Act for compensating workmen engaged in factories. As a hold-up he shines in regard to the report of Dr. Merchant on bilingual schools, by withholding it up till after the elections; and, it is safe betting, that the agreement respecting the boundaries of Ontario and Manitoba will not see daylight till after the elections, on December 11th. It is a beautiful thing to be bold, but it is better to be consistent.

TUBERCULOSIS.

The Peterborough Health Association is showing commendable enterprise in putting on sale, stamps and calendars, in the interests of their funds in the fight against disease, especially tuberculosis, the dreadful instrument in the decimation of our population by death, and in lingering suffering to both victims and friends. It is a disease which yields to preventive, ameliorative and curative treatment and thus enlists the energies and efforts of the philathropic. Their efforts are worthy of the heartiest support. But unfortunately the universal prevalence of the disease, sufficient to constitute it a public calamity and public menace, indicates, that the fight against it should not be confined to necessarily limited private enterprise. It has become a state matter and should be an object of state interest and state action to a far greater extent than obtains at present. The friends of the campaign against tuberculosis could do worse than trying to arouse and enlist the solicitude of the Provincial government, constitutionally charged with the duty of making and administering laws in the interests of the public health. A considerable obstacle in the way of such attainment is the attitude of Sir James Whitney, the head of the government, who ridicules the idea of the claimed prevalence and infectious character of tuberculosis; and cannot, therefore, be expected to lend himself with any great enthusiasm to the promotion of philanthropic work and the initiating of the legislative action demanded. Public money could not be more wisely devoted than in liberal assistance in the fight against tuberculosis. To secure this, curative treatment should be applied to the rather obstinate ailment of Sir James Whitney—a complication of his unbelief in tuberculosis, of belief in himself and his inviolable opinion, and of general debility in regard to recognition of popular claims.

LOCAL OPTION AND THREE-FIFTHS' CLAUSE.

Local option fights are scheduled for four cities, thirteen towns, twenty villages and forty-six township municipalities and forty-six township municipalities at the coming municipal elections. Among the cities is Belleville and Burleigh is the only township in the Peterborough list. The number of licenses at stake is 278, of which 71 are in the four cities, 65 in the thirteen towns, 40 in the twenty villages, and 102 in the forty-six townships. What should add to the interest of the contests, or the sharpness of discussion in the general elections, is the fact that the two events come before the public almost contemperaneously, a circumstance that will give point to the three-fifths clause, which the temperance people regard with such strong reprobation, and to which the Whitney Government adheres with so much obstinate fatuity.

Some advanced temperance people criticise Mr. Rowell, Liberal leader, for not going further in his advocacy of temperance. How much further could he go? The Province cannot enact total prohibition; it has no constitutional power to do so. But it can, and if this law is given a fair chance, the people, by making local option general, can, step by step, make local prohibition prevail throughout the Province, and thus realise the hope of the advanced temperance people, as expressed in their slogan, "Banish the Bar". What chiefly stands in the way of total local prohibition, is the three-fifths' clause, which Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, is pledged to abolish—and Sir James Whitney bound to maintain—and substitute the British principle of majority rule. The actual working of the three-fifths' clause is to defeat local option, and handicap the friends of temperance. Since 1896 there have been local option votes in 387 municipalities, with 1,235 licenses involved. In 306 municipalities, with 913 licenses, there has been a majority vote for the abolition of the bar, but in 120 of these municipalities, with 421 licenses, the three-fifths' clause saved the bar-rooms. In the votes to be taken on local option next January, as mentioned above, it is safe to say that there will be a similar proportionate defeat of the will of the people.

There may be difference of opinion as to the expediency and efficiency of local option; but there are thousands of temperance people who believe in it, and vote for the banishment of the bar. They have a right to have their wishes prevail; but they are robbed of this right by the handicap of the three-fifths' clause. They demand its abolition. Will they support the man who distinctly pledges himself to adopt the British principle of majority rule, or the man who invented the handicap and clings to it with characteristic obstinancy and defiance of public opinion?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Though Sir James Whitney had a big majority in Ontario, he had not, remarks the Toronto Star, a majority big enough to carry local option under his own law. There was a majority of some 60,000, against reciprocity, but it would have required 40,000 more to give the three-fifths majority required for prohibition. Liberty to buy and sell whisky is evidently more precious than liberty to buy and sell food.

Hon. Mr. Monk, with a sense of severe pain in his corns, says that it is naughty for the Liberals to hurl charges of disloyalty across the gangway. Mr. Monk forgets that during the wild and never-to-be-forgotten September of 1911, charges of disloyalty were hurled against all the Liberals of the Dominion by Mr. Monk's Conservative colleagues, in both Government and Chamber, and they didn't hit, either, as they hit the Nationalist element in Mr. Borden's British Cabinet.

NO HOPE FOR ENGINEER

Special Wire to The Examiner.

PORT COLBORNE, DEC. 1—There is little hope now for Engineer William Pritchard, who refused to leave his engine room when the steamer Raleigh was blown on the rocks, off Sherketon, Ont., last night. The bodies of Fred Wise and his wife, who acted as cook, were blown ashore, near Buffalo, and this morning the prow of the illfated vessel can be seen among the breakers of Lake Erie. It is certain that no one can be living aboard of her. Another body is reported on the United States shore, and the members of the crew have been despatched to see if it is Pritchard's.

This Son Of York Lights Up Whitney Methods A Little

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

The supporters of the Whitney Government advance as one of the reasons why the Premier should be returned to office, that he is "safe and conservative," and other party flatterers describe him as "a level headed business man." To keep these time-worn labels upon the present head of the Ontario Government so indiscriminately is surely going a little wide of the mark. For throughout his entire administration he has shown himself to be tenaciously conservative when he should have been a little radical, and to be recklessly radical when he should have been conservative.

When progressive medical men have urged upon him the necessity for taking more aggressive twentieth century measures in the suppression of tuberculosis, Sir James has shown himself to be so conservative that he assumed the attitude of an old-fashioned obstinate doctor who does not believe in the germ theory of disease. His agricultural policy has been equally backward. Are there not hundreds of pitiable cases to be read of every day in the daily press of city-bred Englishmen who have collapsed beneath the rough and heavy labour of an Ontario farm?

What this province wants is a big influx of the English rugged yeoman class, who might not only find employment as farm labourers, but might, in time, and should be given every Government encouragement to own land themselevs.

If Sir James is such "a level-headed business man," why did he contrary to his express promise, unconditionally give away 2,000,000 acres of what very probably is the richest land in the province to the Canadian Northern Railway; lar which might not only have been settled by these English farmer immigrants, but would have in the course of time proved to be a valuable source of revenue to this province.

To go further, were not threats of secession from Old Ontario actually made by the Districts of Rainy River, Algoma and Nipissing only a few years ago, since the 1908 provincial elections? The outcry died down, but did the present Government take any progressive measures which should, for all time, prevent any repetition of this outcry? Was a Department of Immigration and Colonization immediately established which might cope with matters that were outside, or were apparently outside, the jurisdiction of the Hon. Frank Cochrane? Were any steps taken to complete the Hudson Bay Railroad, to open a seaport upon what is practically an arm of the Atlantic, from whose docks Ontario produce might be shipped in carloads to Europe?

What about the conditions of labour in New Ontario? Is the miner any better than a cog in a big machine; has he any reasonable working hours in this body-breaking occupation; does he not find it impossible to resist capitalistic tyranny, not being protected by unionism as are his brethren in southern Ontario? Is not legislation necessary in his behalf, legislation which will give him time to breathe the open air?

In regard to the three-fifths clause, have not protesting delegations from all parts of the province journeyed to Toronto, and have frequently and fruitlessly laid their remonstrances at the feet of the "safe and conservative" autocrat in Queen's Park? Why has Premier Whitney continuously closed his ear to clamorous appeals from the great part of Ontario for the repeal of this clause? Is it because he is so eminently "safe and conservative", or is it because he is, as his flatterers also say, "a level headed business man"?

In his educational policy, the Government leader, far from being "safe and conservative," has been recklessly radical. He abolished the model schools at one fell swoop, and we all know the result. He has lavished vast sums on the University of Toronto, not only at the expense of the public schools, but to the detriment of the High Schools and smaller colleges throughout Ontario.

Patronage has also shown its evils during the present administration; within the past year a near relative of the Premier's secretary has been given a lucrative position in Queen's Park; within the past few months a police magistrate has been dismissed without any ostensible reason.

Has Sir James Whitney acted in "a safe and conservative" manner this fall in plunging the province into an election turmoil so soon after the Borden wave; or has he committed political suicide? Has not his prestige slipped away from him by his radical and unnecessary move? Will he not be the usually accepted month of June no longer Premier of Ontario, but among the ranks of those who "also spoke"?

Yours truly,

YORK.

"BILINGUAL" SCHOOL IN WHICH NEITHER TEACHER NOR 70 PUPILS SPEAK ENGLIS

(Toronto Star Correspondence.)

Hanmer, New Ontario, November 29.—"How many pupils have you in your class, teacher?"

"Comment, M'sieu?" (What's that, sir?)

"Oh, vous ne parlez pas Anglais?" (Oh, you don't speak English?)

"No, M'sieu."

Such is part of a conversation which a representative of The Star had with one of the two teachers in the school in this village a day or so ago. Further conversation confirmed her statement that she had absolutely no knowledge of the English language. And yet she had complete charge of a room full of children, the future men and women of this Province. And it was not a small room, either, with six or eight names on the roll. The register has no less than seventy names, and the attendance is a high percentage. A bilingual school? Well, one can hardly call a school attended by French children and in charge of a French teacher bilingual. It is French, pure and simple.

It must be confessed that even to one who has not formed a particularly high opinion of the way the English language is being taught in a large section of the Province, the conditions at Hanmer came as something of a shock. Other teachers had been met with whose knowledge of English appeared none too great, but here was an instance of a teacher wholly unable to express herself in some way or other in English. One involuntarily recalled the statement of Sir James Whitney that there were no bilingual schools, of Hon. J. J. Foy that they are illegal, and of Hon. Dr. Pyne that they must go and that all teachers must be English.

NOTE—Premier Whitney has appointed four French-speaking bilingual inspectors. He has appointed a special commission to investigate bilingual schools, and he has refused to submit any information to the electors. He has left to the enterprise of a newspaper to find out flaws in the bilingual schools, which he says do not exist. He is responsible for educational administration and should state the facts to the people, whose support he is claiming.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

TWO women were talking about reading poetry.

Said one, "I can read poetry with an intellectual appreciation, but I don't really enjoy it as you do. And even the liking I have, was acquired, and acquired with difficulty. I remember I used to hate poetry in school and wonder why people didn't say what they had to say in good, straight prose, instead of rhyming it and singsonging it. How is it that you are so fond of poetry?"

Answered the other, "Because I've always heard it since I was a baby. Before I could talk mother used to read and repeat poetry to me.

And as soon as I could talk at all, father taught me scraps of poetry—not silly rhymes—but beautiful bits like 'The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings.' Often I didn't understand the things at the time, but the meaning came to me afterwards, and I always liked the sound."

The ability to really enjoy good poetry is undoubtedly rare in this prosaic century.

Culture seekers often deliberately acquire it. But everyday folks more often regard poetry to the end of their lives as a foolish way of saying in rhyme and sing-song what could be quite as well said in straight prose.

Surely then, any child owes his parents a debt of gratitude if they have given him the precious possession of a life long enjoyment of poetry by the simple method of reading and repeating good poetry to him in his childhood.

The wonder to me is that more parents do not do this.

Before a child can talk, he understands a great deal of what is said to him. Everyone who has ever had anything to do with a baby knows this. Ask the little one who will not say anything but "papa" and "mama" and "all gone" or something like that, where his eyes, nose or his toes are and see how promptly he points them out.

Well, then, why not occasionally, when you are cuddling, rocking or playing with him, read or repeat some good poetry to him? He may not understand it at all. But being a child, untrammelled by the grown up's need of seeing common sense in everything, he will surely enjoy the music. And the chances are that he will understand some of it and make up childish pictures to fit the words.

What shall you read? Well, there's Stevenson's Child's Garden of Verse, Eugene Field's poems and some of James Whitcomb Riley's for the very little ones.

Then as the child grows older he ought to appreciate Scott's poems, John Gilpin's ride, Holmes' Grandmother Story, Longfellow's Hiawatha, The Courtship of Miles Standish, Paul Revere's Ride, Whittier's Maud Muller, Barbara Frietchie, and even some of Shakespeare's sonnets.

Surely all of these have either music or story enough to hold even very young ears.

Personally, I think we insult our children's brains and comprehensions by the weak mental pabulum in the way of stories which we give them. I think the child who hears great and beautiful things will soon come to vaguely appreciate part, if not all, of their meaning.

Perhaps the little ones may not care for some of these poems at first, but remember that with childhood the more familiar a tale the better loved it is—persevere, and I'm sure the liking will come.

And some day a man or woman who is reading and delighting in some beautiful poem will pause to thank you for his power of enjoyment.

Ruth Cameron

AS IT IS AND MIGHT BE

MARRIED LIFE AS IT IS.

"Well, of all the disappointing men—here I have been waiting nearly an hour with my things on! Where have you been?"

"Tending to business. Where do you suppose?"

"You never can tell where a man is, and I am not the one to pretend I can, like some women do."

"Pity about you women. Why don't you tie a string to us and be done with it?"

"That's right; sneer at me!"

"Who's sneering? But it takes thief to catch a thief, you know!"

"I suppose you think it gentlemanly to talk to me like this, but it's not, and a real gentleman wouldn't do it."

"I'm no gentleman is the deduction, eh? Well, you had the chance to refuse me—why didn't you, and marry a gentleman?"

"I shall wish I had if you don't stop talking this way to me."

"You won't be the only one who will wish it if you don't make things a little more pleasant around here!"

"If you are dissatisfied, you can get rid of me any time you want to!"

"Oh, for goodness' sake, Mabel, keep still and put these studs in for me."

"I suppose you wish you had married that namby-pamby Gertrude Lennox."

"She wouldn't have nagged me all the time, I'm sure."

"No, she hasn't spunk enough to say her soul's her own."

"If some other people were a little more like her in that particular it would be better for all concerned."

"Thank goodness, I'm not! You can't put upon me, Jack Henderson. There's your shirt—now hurry!"

"Thank you."

"Oh, you needn't thank me, I'm sure you wouldn't have been so cruel to Gertrude if you had married her!"

"Cruel? I don't understand you sometimes, Mabel. You act as though you were determined to say and do things just to annoy me."

"You never annoy me, oh, no! The woman is always to blame, especially if she is your wife——"

"For—oh, where is the black tie; I can't find it; I can't wear anything else with a dinner coat."

"I gave away a lot of your old ties the other day and that may have been among them."

"Well, that's a pretty how-de-do!"

"Now scold about that-"

"Any man would. Here I have got to stop and buy a tie just on account of your carelessness!"

"Are you ready at last? Talk about women being slow, I could have dressed three times while you have been getting ready."

"Not if someone was nagging the life out of you while you were doing it, I'll bet!"

AS IT MIGHT BE

"Well, Jack, dear, I began to wish you were never coming. I have been ready for nearly an hour."

"Too bad, Puss, but I just couldn't get away—one thing after another kept coming up at the last minute."

"It's awful hard for a man to tell when he can get home, isn't it, dear?"

"Indeed, it is."

"Well, now that you are here we mustn't talk—you must hurry."

"All right dear, I'll be dressed in a jiffy—at least I will if you will help me."

"Of course I will. If I had known what you had wanted to wear I would have had your things ready."

"A dress shirt, dear—put the studs in please—and get out a black string tie."

"Oh Jack, what will you do to me? I gave away a lot of your old ties and gave the only black string you had!"

"My, that's too bad, but don't look as though you were going to cry."

"I'm so sorry, dear. It was so careless in me not to tell you or buy you another."

"Well, the only thing to do is to go into some haberdasher's and buy one."

"I shan't mind, dear, and if I did, it would serve me right for being so careless."

"Don't scold yourself, Puss; you are not often careless of my comfort."

"I promise never to do it again, cross my heart."

"I forgive you. Whom do you think I saw to-day?"

"I'm sure I can't imagine! Who was it?"

"Gertrude Lennox."

"That's the girl I was so jealous of."

"With no reason. Gertrude never was one, two, six with me after I met you."

"Really, Jack—or do you say that to please me?"

"No, really and truly, 'Cross my heart,' as you said a moment ago."

"Here's your shirt, dear. You always were the nicest thing in evening clothes. I fall in love with you all over again every time you dress up."

"After that, I'll never kick about dressing. Don't you think I had better keep them on all the time, then I will be sure to keep you in love?"

"You ridiculous darling! How did Gertrude look dear — now tell the truth!"

"Of course, I will. She was distractingly pretty, just as she always is. But she is too soft and silly. Such girls make good parlour ornaments, but deliver me from their constant companionship!"

"Why, Jack?"

"If a man didn't tell them a dozen times an hour that he loved them they would feel and act abused."

"Maybe you think I don't love to be told these things, too?"

"Yes, dear, but you don't make me feel that I must, whether I am in the mood or not"

Fall Plowing

From Farm and Dairy.

Fall plowing of the garden destroys cutworms and other insects, besides getting rid of fall weeds.

Lay down and cover raspberries, blackberries and grapes this month. Do this when there is no frost in the canes.

Throw a few shovelfuls of earth against the young apple and plum trees before the ground freezes. This will help keep mice away from the trunks.

Wormy and diseased fruit should not be left on the ground all winter. Many diseases are carried over in this manner.

Fall plowing in the orchard means earlier cultivation next spring. If you don't believe in fall plowing make a trial of it on one or two rows of trees.

It is well to delay mulching the strawberry plantation until the ground freezes.

To make sure of the grapes, raspberries and blackberries wintering successfully, bend them down along the row and cover with earth. Then with the addition of snow they will be well protected.

Save a few cuttings of grapes for planting next year. Cut the wood into pieces having two or three buds, and place in sand or sawdust in a cellar until spring, when they may be planted out in nurser, rows.

Squash and pumpkins should be stored in a dry cellar or building, where the temperature is between 50 and 60 degrees. Only mature specimens should be used, and these should be handled carefully to prevent injury.

A supply of rhubarb may be had during the winter, if a few clumps are taken up before the ground freezes and put in boxes or on the cellar floor. These clumps may be broken into pieces and covered about one inch deep with soil. Water thoroughly, and keep in the dark, so that only a small leaf surface will be formed. It is well to let the roots freeze until about December 20th.

It is possible—maybe—to build a piano that in exterior appearance might resemble a though this is doubtful, so largely does real art enter into the making of these Dominion-wide pianos. But there is no duplicating the tone of the genuine Heintzman & Co. piano. It is the outcome of half a century of patient study and labor. This cannot be equalled—and tone is the real test of a high-class piano.

"The Fruit Marks Act"

From Farm and Dairy.

N. B. Ireland, Sask. Dist., Sask.

I notice an editorial in Farm and Dairy of Oct. 26 re "The Fruit Marks Act." Some of my personal experiences in purchasing apples and in hearing the complaints of responsible merchants who have been victimized by dishonest fruit packers from Ontario may be of interest to your readers.

Western fruits are here held in great esteem. They are neatly wrapped and placed in rows in a box holding about one-third of a barrel, and bring a good demand from being uniform in size and true to both grade and name. The Ontario fruit is shipped with name of packer and "supposed" quality marked on the barrel, but I am sorry to say, when the dealer comes to open the barrel he finds the centre of the barrel several grades lower than the ends, and the quantity of bruised fruit from the rough handling, through the fruit being packed in unwieldy barrels is great. A drayman puts a barrel on his back from the dray and throws it down on the floor of the wareroom with a crash that makes everything rattle, with the natural result, bruised fruit, a quantity of which is unsaleable. This disgusts the merchant, who, naturally enough, decides that it is to his advantage to buy fruit packed in neat boxes, which the drayman carries in and packs in neat piles several tiers high instead of having barrels thrown all over the floor till assistance comes to help lift them up into the tiers as required.

Every person here appreciates the fact that the Ontario fruit is preferable to the western or southern fruits of the same variety. The flavor is superior, and we would be willing to buy it in preference to the larger and more highly colored western fruit if we could depend upon getting the quality we order and pay for. We find that the Fruit Marks Act in Ontario is a farce, so far as shipments into this county are concerned, and as a Canadian from Ontario it disgusts me to see the government spending lavishly in an endeavor to build up a trade in England and elsewhere for Canadian produce and neglecting the market under their very eyes, which to-day is sending vast amounts of money to the American side for produce which could and would be bought from our own farmers in Ontario. But we are actually hindered from doing so by dishonest shippers.

There may be some way the present law allows shippers to forward their cars of packed and marked fruit out here to their own order or address as a number of the Ontario shippers come up here and dispose of their stock personally. If such is the way the law is being evaded, it is time for a change with "hurry up orders."

A CHANGE SUGGESTED

The law should be revised as to forbid fruit being packed in a parcel of more than 75 lbs. weight, and with outer package of material, when wood, of board not less than one-quarter inch in thickness to ensure safe transit.

It is an injustice to both the people who would buy and pay a reasonable price for fruit and also the growers in Ontario who have tons of fruit wasted every year, that the law does not compel fruit to be packed in the manner that the Americans have adopted and will give to Ontario some of their prices.

TOMATOES AT 25 CTS. A LB.

Tomatoes are usually sold to the canning companies in Ontario at about 30 cts. a bus., which is in the neighborhood of one-half cent a pound. Here in the last two seasons we have always sold a tomato which is brought from the States of Washington and Oregon, and of very inferior quality, for from 12 1-2 to 25 cts. a lb. If the Ontario packers would adopt a crate similar to the one used by the American packers they could easily obtain even higher prices than those here quoted as there is no comparison in quality and flavor.

The trouble is that the Ontario packers insist upon using the old 11-qt. baskets, made of material so thin that, in an endeavor to get them to sustain their own weight when piled in a car, a narrow board is placed across the pile at intervals. Imagine the disgust of a merchant when he goes to unload his car and finds the fruit so mushy that the water is standing in pools on the car floor, and when he places them for exhibit on his store floor there is another tell-tale stream.

WORK FOR THE ASSOCIATIONS

Why cannot the cooperative associations make an effort to remedy this needless waste of money? What I have said of tomatoes is also true of other Ontario fruits of every sort. The remedying of the mode of packing would mean the sale of thousands of tons of Ontario fruit that decays in the fields, and for which people here would willingly pay from four cents to 25 cts. a pound.

Every person who has travelled as extensively in both Ontario and the middle west as I have will agree with what I have here said. I must beg the editor's pardon for having written such a lengthy letter on this matter. I know that the endeavor of Farm and Dairy is to further the interest of Canada by educating the farmers in what will make them more prosperous, so believe you will forgive me for utilizing so much valuable space.

A WORD OF GRATITUDE

Under Which Flag? Beer Or Brains

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I met a number of Mr. Peck's supporters to-day, who, instead of discussing the merits of the Employers' Compensation Act, as endorsed by Mr. R. R. Hall, scoff at the idea of a lawyer doing anything to help the working men. Evidently they are expressing Mr. Peck's sentiment, and, I believe, the sentiment of the whole Conservative party. In fact, history proves to us that the Conservative party, both in Canada and England, has no use for the working man, only at election time, and for his vote. After that, it is "go back and sit down, until you you are asked." Mr. Hall has the reputation of carrying out his promises to his constituents, and he is sincere in his promises to help the working man in this Compensation and Factory Act. Some one has stated that he has $10,000 to spend to win this election. Well, I would rather vote for the man who who has $10,000 in cash, than the man who has 10,000 bottles of beer from a brewery which he has a financial interest in, and in the distribution of 10,000 bottles of beer, will give this Company at least $500 worth of advertising. It makes me shudder at the consequences of the result of that 10,000 bottles of beer. What do our Temperance people think of it?

Yours truly,
Anxious Parent.

A Concrete Case Of Mr. Peck's Friendship For The Workingman

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see the Conservative candidate for the west riding poses as a true friend to the working man, and claims that the latter will have his sympathy and support at all times, should he (Mr. Peck) have the honour of being elected. I feel that we should judge a man by his past actions rather than by his pre-election promises. Some years ago, shortly after the printers of this town became an organized body, they presented a request to their employers, for an increase of wages. Negotiations were begun, but no great progress made, and for a time it looked as if there was going to be a strike and suspension of publication. However, some gentlemen bestirred themselves and proposed that the matter be arbitrated. It is said the printers wanted to settle the matter themselves without outside interference, but were eventually prevailed upon to allow a board of three gentlemen to settle the dispute, bein gassured that they would get every justice, as it was well known their request was only a just and reasonable one. The printers named "Bob" McGregor, the employers chose Mr. T. F. Matthews, and Mr. Peck was named as the third arbitrator. The latter of course, was supposed to hold the balance and give his decision according to the merits of the case.

After several sessions hearing evidence, the award was made and the printers tell me it was the rawest deal that was ever handed out to them. The third arbitrator said that though the men had his "sympathy," and though they should be better paid, yet when the employers said they could not afford higher wages, that ended it.

That little incident had a bad effect in after years. Arbitration is a right and proper thing, but no wonder it was a by-word in trade circles in coming years at least as far as settling trade disputes in this city was concerned.

Though I vote the Conservative ticket as a usual thing, yet in this election my vote will go to R. R. Hall, who I believe will give the working man a square deal, and not the kind of "sympathy" which Mr. Peck seems to have such an abundant supply of.

F. W. H.

P.S.—Mr. Editor, I doubt if you will insert this in your paper, as it deals with internal affairs, but I feel that the public should know something of Mr. Peck's stand as an arbitrator in a trade dispute, how he threw down the workingmen when they needed a friend. They asked bread and they got a stone — in the neck. The man who takes the words of the "bosses" against the men, is not likely to break his neck to help the working man. That shows where he stands.

Graham, Fake Electric Line Promoter Had Record At St. Kitts

Mr. Harry Graham the young promoter of the fake electric trolley line from Port Hope through Lindsay to Orillia and Barrie, who is at present incarcerated in the Lindsay jail, and who will be tried this morning, was a high-flyer at St. Catharines. Following is an article from the St. Catharines Journal of July 27, telling of Graham's operations in St. Kitts.

"The king of bluffers has been found. He is Malcolm Graham, of Trenton, Ont., who was arrested on Wednesday night and is now confined in the county jail on a week's remand.

Graham surpassed all records as far as what is known as "four-flushing" on the street is concerned, and his career, though short, contained enough interesting features to fill a book. He came to the city practically unknown, and after a few weeks began cutting a swath that would make Mr. Pierpont Morgan blink, or would have done justice to John D. Rockefeller or some other aristocrat. But it is doubtful if John D. would make such a splash in such a short time, with all his millions. Graham started in in grand style and so easily won the confidence of those with whom he came in contact, that he had smooth sailing from the start and for that matter might have been sailing on yet had his conscience not started working and caused him to admit that his pretensions were false.

Graham came to the city about a month ago and secured employment at the Simcoe Canning Factory on Lake street. He worked for about two weeks, when he secured a job with Mr. Ed. Burratt as an electrical worker. For Mr. Burratt he worked for a time, after which he was engaged by the Martin Electric Supply Company.

It was at this point that Graham started to break into the "classy style." For two days he laid off to attend the funeral of an uncle, he said, and upon his return stated that a small fortune of $44,000 had been left to him by the deceased relative. He also said that his father was the owner of two fine automobiles and was staying at Niagara Falls for a few days before coming to St. Catharines. To further strengthen his case he appeared with a fine Reno auto for which he said he had paid $1457.50. He was not a bit selfish, either, taking Mr. Martin and family out for spins and treating them in fine style. He also made overtures towards buying an hotel.

After a few adys he expressed a desire to purchase stock in the Martin Electric Company and as his representations seemed good, Mr. Martin decided to sell him some 35 shares at $100 per share. The papers were made out and duly signed but the cheque from Graham was not forthcoming, and the bluff was only called when the "millionaire" admitted to Mr. A. Fifield, the manager of the Reo garage, that he had no money and could not pay for the auto which he purchased. Mr. Martin was notified, and in turn notified the police, who arrested the man last night.

While negotiating with Mr. Martin for a share in the business Graham announced that he was engaged to be married to a young lady, and upon the strength of this obtained a quantity of wire, electrical fixtures and lamps. Mr. Martin, believing he was to marry Miss Disher, a daughter of Mr. Joseph Disher of Summer street, at whose home he was boarding, gave him the material, which was installed in the house and is still there. It now appears that Graham's affections were directed towards a Miss Harris, who was boarding at the Disher home."

Suit Against Local Man

TORONTO, NOV. 30.—David Viener, of Peterborough, under 21 years of age, is suing, with Jacob Viener of Toronto, acting as guardian and next friend, Frank White of Peterborough, for unstated damages for alleged false arrest and malicious prosecution and trespass.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

"RULE OF THUMB"

From Farm and Dairy.

The "rule of thumb" butter making days are gone. No one at the present time can hold an important position in the profession of butter making unless thoroughly grounded in the principles that underly it. It is true that many obscure problems relative to butter making yet remain to be solved. What knowledge we have up-to-date, however, is set forth in a clear practical manner in the sixth edition of "Creamery Butter Making," written by John Michels, B.S.A., M.S., a former professor of dairying, a practical butter maker and now editor of the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal.

In preparing the sixth edition of "Creamery Butter Making" a thorough revision has been made of the entire book, and new chapters have been added dealing with such subjects as creamery ice-cream making, eggs as a creamery sideline, creamery by-products, advice to new butter makers, gasoline power, and the determination of salt in butter.

Nothing has been left undone to bring the book strictly up-to-date in every particular. "Creamery Butter Making" has been almost universally adopted as a text and reference book in United States dairy schools. A glossary explaining all unavoidable technical terms makes this book a suitable hand-book for both the student and the butter maker who cannot attend a dairy school. Price through Farm and Dairy, $1.50.

The Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of the Peterborough Golf and Country Club will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers Saturday evening, Dec. 2nd, at 8 o'clock. F. E. Clarke, Secretary. 3d-127

Worn Out?

British "Tariff Reformers," for the purposes of their fraud, have done their best to persuade the world that this old country was worn-out, was daily losing ground commercially, was being badly beaten in the race for commerce, and many other things equally untrue, and in any country but this they would have been in the dock as traitors of the worst type.

Singularly enough this garbage has been most readily consumed by hard-headed, astute Canadians, the most loyal of all our Colonials and the most respected here. True, they have been lied to with a ferocity and a persistency which is characteristic of the British "Tariff Reformer," and their sources of information in this country have been not only tainted, but putrid. We hope, therefore that readers who have friends in Canada will let them have the following facts.

A few years ago we were speculating as to whether it was possible for any country in the world to do a foreign trade amounting to a thousand million pounds in one year. The United States, with double our population, has not yet approached three-quarters of that amount.

In 1909 we just topped the thousand millions; last year we did 1108 millions; and unless something untoward happens in the last two months, we shall this year do 1150 millions worth, in spite of the disruption occasioned by the railway strike. Up to the end of October we had done 924 millions worth.

Of our exports over 80 per cent. were manufactured goods, and our average exports of manufactured goods, per head of the population, far exceeds those of the United States and Germany combined, and may this year cap those of the United States, France and Germany combined.

Worn-out! — Midland (Eng.) Mail.

Portion Of Cribwork Is Completed

About one hundred feet of cribwork for the new dock has been completed, and will be placed in position in the course of a few days. The cribbing, which is constructed of very heavy timber, is built on the shore, in sections. As each portion is completed it is taken apart and put into position in the water. After being assembled the interior of the crib is filled with stone. The completed portion of the cribwork will be placed on the north side of the wharf, a place having been dredged out for its reception.

About twenty-five men are at present employed on the work, which is being pushed forward with rapidity. The work of dredging the channel, so that the boats can navigate it, is nearly completed.

DAIRY WISDOM

From Farm and Dairy.

Many bits of dairy wisdom were spoken by Secretary Wilson of the United States Department of Agriculture in his address at the opening of the National Dairy Show in Chicago recently. The following are extracts from that address:

"When we make the most of our time and acres, we will sell no cow feed to Europeans to maintain their soil fertility and reduce ours as we now do.

"The cow should be bred for milk and fed for milk. Her health and comfort are as important as our own; she provides us a perfect ration from calving to old age.

"Dairying is destined to become more and more prominent as a branch of agriculture in this country.

"The dairy cow is one of the most economical producers of human food and can therefore be profitably kept in populous regions where land values are high.

"Tuberculosis is a great problem confronting the live stock industry. A comparatively recent estimate of the Department indicates that on an average more than 10 per cent of the dairy cattle in the United States are affected with tuberculosis."

Hundreds of People Sat Down to Sumptuous Repast in the Market Hall—Splendid Programme.

BROKE ALL RECORDS

The annual Fowl Supper and Young People's Rally, held last night, under the auspices of St. Luke's Ladies' Aid, in the Market Hall, was a complete and unqualified success. It was a blending of all the denominations of the city, into one big, happy family, bent on having a good time. It is estimated that about one thousand people were present, and that far exceeds the number of those who are ordinarily wont to attend social functions of this nature.

The crowd commenced to arrive early in the evening, and by six o'clock seating room at the well-laden tables was at a premium. The dining section of the hall was divided off by a curtained partition, and on the outside of this the overflow crowd waited patiently for their turn at the liberally supplied tables. Fire Chief Howard and Chief of Police Thompson were present and enlivened the proceedings by their sociability.

Rev. E. J. Sawers, in the capacity of chairman, welcomed the gathering on behalf of the Ladies' Aid. A letter was read from Mr. J. J. Turner, who is now in Regina, expressing his regret at being unable to be present. The speaker, in conclusion, said that he was pleased to be able to announce that Rev. Dr. Symonds, who is well-known in this city, was making satisfactory progress towards recovery from his recent illness.

The next speaker was Rev. Mr. Pogue of St. Paul's, who made a reference to the growth of the Young People's movement, in this city.

Owing to a pressing engagement elsewhere in the city, he was compelled to cut his remarks on this important subject short.

Programme.

The programme was very appropriately arranged, and showed unusual merit, and skill, on the part of the performers. The musical numbers were all effectively and efficiently rendered, while the readings given by Mrs. Allen and Mr. J. Johns made a very pleasing variation. The piano solo by Mrs. Rehill was an exhibition of technique and skill, evoking enthusiastic applause from the large assemblage. The violin selection by Mrs. Read was greatly appreciated. Her execution was practically faultless, and her rendition of the difficult passages left no doubt as to her ability in this respect. She responded to an encore by playing another beautiful selection, which was responsible for great applause. Mrs. Allen displayed expert skill as an elocutionist, and her readings were highly appreciated.

The vocalist of the evening was Mr. H. G. Fitzgerald, whose rendering was given with considerable expression, and evoked loud applause and an encore. The violin selection by Mrs. Whitehouse, made a most acceptable addition to the programme, and the rendering was evidence of a degree of artistic ability, reflecting great credit on the musician.

Mr. Johns' catchy and humorous reading, which received numerous encores, concluded a very creditable programme.

The whole event was one of exceptional merit, and its successful issue was due in no small measure, to the untiring efforts of St. Luke's Ladies' Aid. They worked like Trojans, and the success attending the results of their labour was a well-merited one.

The hall was elaborately decorated with flags and ribbons, while flowers and ferns graced the festive board.

After supper had been served, a sale of home-made fancy work was conducted, when, under the able supervision of a corps of ladies the pile of fancy work disappeared like a snowball before a Chinook wind.

Mr. Jacobi, proprietor of the Peterborough Lunch, very ably assisted the ladies in their efforts to make the event a success as also did Mrs. Wm Gibbs, president of the Ladies' Aid.

AN AFTERNOON EXTRA OF ART EXHIBITION

The splendid art exhibition, under the auspices of the Women's Art Association, in the Public Library, which comes to an official conclusion tonight, will be continued Saturday afternoon.

The magnificent water colours of Mr Waring, consisting mainly of English pastoral and domestic subjects, have constituted a strong appeal to those of English birth, who have been fortunate enough to see reproduced, with the highest artistic skill familiar scenes in the home land. To give other Englishmen and the general public a further opportunity to see these peitures and others on display, it has been decided to continue the exhibition on Saturday afternoon from 2 to 6 p.m., at the reduced price of admission, 10 cents. This will afford an excellent opportunity for those who are busy on other afternoons of the week to see the best collection of water colours, oils and objects d'art that have ever been placed in Peterborough.

IS POWER DEVELOPMENT DEVELOPING INTO A DREAM?

The question of Peterborough power through the Hydro-Electric Commission, demands deeper and more careful study and deliberation than at first appeared. The people want to consider whether it is a practicable and paying proposal or a mere scheme launched at election times to catch votes under false pretences.

This latter consideration seems to be given emphasis by the extraordinary statement attributed to Hon. Adam Beck, that Dams No. 4 and No. 5 on the Trent Canal would produce 20,000 to 25,000 horse power. This is self-evidently absurd. The report of Mr. Beck's own engineer gives the total possible development at Dam No. 4 as 1,100 horse power, and at Dam No. 5, 1,280 horse power—a total at the two of 2,380, as against the wild figures of 20,000 to 25,000 horse power of Mr. Beck.

If Mr. Beck inadvertently substituted Dam 4 or Dam 5 for Dam No. 8, he doesn't improve his position much. His own engineer estimates the power development at Dam No. 8 at 5,200 horse power, and the Railways and Canals engineer, at 6,817; so that even with this, or the whole three dams taken together, the greatest possible development is only 7,580 horse power, or a third or a fourth less than Hon Mr. Beck's estimate.

Then there is this practical consideration: According to Mr. Beck's own engineer's statements, we have, even including all three dams, promise of only 7,580 horse power—that is the theoretical horse power development. When we come to deduct 10 per cent. for loss from wheel to generator, 5 per cent. in transmission, 7 or 8 per cent in transforming, and something like 10 per cent. in distribution, we have to make a deduction of about 25 per cent. loss from the water wheel to the lamp or machine; so that the actual power available under the best conditions for use from Dams 4 and 5, would be reduced to 1,785 horse power, and the reduced available—usable—power developed from all three dams would be reduced to 5,715 horse power.

Hon. Mr. Beck may have erred inadvertently—he would not do so knowingly. But that makes it all the more necessary for the people to carefully scrutinize the Hydro-Electric power proposal, pitch-forked upon the people of Peterborough at election time. If Mr. Beck makes such a mistake in boom power possibilities for Peterborough, it shows that—with all this experience, his heart is not in the matter, and leads to the suspicion that he regards the matter as a vote-catching expedient, and the bigger the bait the bigger the catch.

Anyway we want power, but we must have time to think. To demand the people of Peterborough to decide upon a matter involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, and full of engineering and financial problems, in the few distracting days before an election, is making rather a strong draft upon their credulity and innocence.

The matter is oe that must be thought over; no elector will be deluded, that doesn't want to be deluded, by absurdly large and contradictory figures, as a basis of political support.

Peterborough wants power, but it doesn't want it dished with too much politics.

The wise ratepayer and wise voter will not be stampeded; he will think over the matter before he is influenced in casting his vote by a power proposal that is beginning to take on the character of a dream

HE DID NOT INTEND TO SHOOT WILL BE PRISONER'S DEFENCE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, QUE., DEC. 1.—Held by the Coroner's Jury on the charge of murder, Charles L. Ross, of Ottawa, who, on Wednesday night, shot and killed Robert Fitzsimmons, following a quarrel over a card game, in the Orpheum Theatre, this morning, appeared before Judge Lazin, and pleaded not guilty. His defence will be that he did not intend to shoot, but the revolver was discharged accidentally during the struggle. Ross presented a pitiable figure. At the investigation this morning, he moaned and sobbed continually, and the flood of tears told of the remorse which he felt.

RAILWAY NEWS

A narrow escape from death was experienced by a lady at the Charlotte Street crossing this morning, the outcome of her disregard of the closed gates, and repeated warnings. She lady disregarded the gates and crossed the track, but in this instance her negligence proved fatal. She was cut to pieces by a passing train. This should serve as a warning to persons passing railway crossings, and the gatekeepers at Charlotte and Simcoe streets crossing will, no doubt, be relieved if pedestrians would exercise a little more discretion in such matters. Further, there is a by-law to the effect that none shall cross the track when the gates are closed. Should pedestrians ignore this, they act on their own responsibility.

The contents of a delivery cart came to grief at the G. T. R. Station this morning. On approaching the cars for the purpose of loading, the driver turned the horse rather suddenly and the contents, which were piled up on the trolley toppled over, and with it the driver. A box of molasses was broken in at one end and the contents running all over the other articles, occasioned a sorry sight.

Only Saturday last a similar incident occurred in Toronto, when a passed under the gates, and, irrespective of due warning, she crossed the track just as the "moonlight" engine, which had just dropped its cars, was passing. But for the action of one of the railway employees, she must surely have been killed.

LONG RECESS IS PROBABLE

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, DEC. 1.—Although no definite decision has been reached as to the adjournment of Parliament over the Christmas holidays, it begins to look as if the advocates of a long recess had won out. The proposition will probably be for an adjournment for next Wednesday, until January 8. This would give the Government time to prepare the measures which it has promised and would also allow the Ontario members to participate in the provincial elections.

The exhibit will be open to-night and to-morrow afternoon.

Splendid Recital

Miss Teresa McNamara Contributed a Creditable Programme Last Night

Last evening Miss Teresa McNamara, a student at St. Mary's convent, gave a piano recital for the pupils of the Senior grade, in which she acquitted herself most creditably. She promises to be an accomplished musician. Miss Marguerite Clancy gave a vocal selection very sweetly, and Mr. Vincent McCabe contributed a violin number with fine tone and expression. Miss Mary Lonergan was the accompanist. This is the first of a series of recitals, which will be continued during the winter. Following is the programme:

(a) Chopin—Valse, Op. 34, No. 1.
(b) Schumann—Ausschwung.
Vocal—"Asthore".
(a) Bach—Inventions, 93 voices, Nos. 1 and 2.

WOMEN'S ART ASSOCIATION READING CLUB

A meeting of those interested in the formation of a reading club in connection with the Women's Art Association, is called for Saturday evening, Dec. 2nd, at 8 p.m. This meeting will be held in the new W.A.A. room in the basement of the library, southwest corner. The programme for the winter's work will be discussed and a committee appointed to arrange the work. A large attendance is hoped for.

LAID TO REST

The remains of the late Mr. William Hinchcliffe of 429 Sheridan street, were laid in their last resting place this afternoon.

The Rev. Canon Davidson officiated at a very impressive service in St. John's church at 2 o'clock, after which the funeral cortege proceeded to the Little Lake cemetery, where interment took place.

The funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Canadian Order of Foresters, of which the deceased was an esteemed member. There was a large number of friends present and the magnificent display of floral tributes were symbolical of the high respect in which Mr. Hinchcliffe was universally held.

The pallbearers were: Messrs. Robert Fair, Henry Rush, William Hill, Dr. Morrow, William Greene and T. H. Hooper.

BITTEN BY A DOG

Mr. Howard Lewis, a traveller for a Montreal drygoods house, was severely bitten by a dog this morning. It was while walking along Simcoe street, and in the act of picking up a newspaper, which he had dropped, that the dog rushed out from a nearby doorway, and, without warning, grabbed his victim by the leg. At this juncture the owner of the dog appeared on the scene, and called the animal into the house, at the same time venturing an explanation to the effect that she had never known the dog to act like that before. The bite inflicted upon Mr. Lewis necessitated him having the wound cauterized.

FRACTURED ARM

An Italian working on the C. P. R. construction work, about four miles east of the city, had the misfortune to badly fracture his arm this afternoon. A telegram was sent to the city, and Dr. Young made a record trip to set the injured member. The man's name is not to hand and further details are not available.

Mr. H. Lee Promoted

(Lindsay Warder)

Mr. W. J. Andrews, who, for over a year, has been residing in town as local manager of the Machine Telephone Co., has left for the city of Brantford, where he will take up heavier duties with the main plant of the Company. He will be succeeded as manager in Lindsay by Mr. H. Lee.

During Mr. Andrews' sojourn in Lindsay he has gained a large number of friends, and he has placed the Machine Telephone in excellent standing in the community. Upwards of three hundred new 'phones have been installed, and are in good, working order, giving general satisfaction.

In conversation with Mr. Andrews he informed the Warder man that it was the purpose of the company for a time to centre their work at Peterborough, where the system will be put on a proper working basis. The people of Peterborough have had a number of Machine 'phones for some years, but the system has as yet not been properly organized, and no charge has been made for the service.

When the Peterborough system is put on an equality with the service in Lindsay, it is the intention to establish direct communication between the two towns. In fact, Mr. Andrews stated, it is the intention to do as much of the line work as possible during the winter.

THE UNPLEASANT TRUTH

The following letter was received by the editor of The New York Times and explains itself:

May an Englishman venture a few solemn remarks on the subject of jokes? I have had the current American theory of the Englishman's atrophied receptivity trust upon me many a time. But can Americans really see a joke when it is on themselves? How, if so, can American football be accounted for? I would back it against the world for championship as "the booby game of the universe of sport," as some writer once called it in your columns. It is the stupidest as a spectacle, the least sportsmanlike in principle, the most injurious to players, the most idiotic as to rules, of any game played among modern nations. It would not draw a corporal's guard of attendance on its merits. With all the pumped-up enthusiasm of the college corps and fashion, and eager desire for advertising, you feel greatly set up when it draws audiences of 20,000 or so. Piffle, gentlemen! I have seen 20,000 people at merely practice games at Oxford of English football, which is as radically different from the American game as billiards is from ping pong—and as much better!

ORIGINAL UNIFORMS FOR LOCAL TEAMS THIS YEAR

Petes Will be Garbed in Blue and White Sweaters Striped in the Ottawa Style---Both Teams to be Dressed Alike ---Ed. Dillon's Appointment as Trainer Confirmed.

When the Peterborough hockey team take the ice this winter they will show the fans something new in the way of uniforms. At last night's meeting of the executive, held at the Examiner office, it was decided to adopt an original design and this year, sweaters with two-inch blue and white vertical stripes will be used. The Ottawa professional team were the first to use this style and it will be a novelty as far as the O.H.A. is concerned. The executive decided to purchase new uniforms of this pattern for both intermediate and junior players, and an order will be sent in to the manufacturers at once. Either black or solid blue stockings will be used.

The appointment of Ed. Dillon as trainer for the season, was formally confirmed by the executive last night. The terms proposed by the Hockey Club management were satisfactory to Mr. Dillon.

The committee appointed to wait upon the Brock street rink management reported that the rink had been secured on the same terms as last year.

Those present at the meeting were President Sam Ray, Vice-President Jos. Picard, secretary-treasurer R. M. Glover. Executive members, Thos. McGeachie, C. J. Curtis, F. D. Craig.

PLENTY OF MATERIAL FOR PETERBORO' HOCKEY TEAMS

Big Squad Will Commence Preliminary Training at the Y. M. C. A. To-night at 7:30 O'clock.

JUNIORS IN LINE

The Peterborough Hockey Club's junior and intermediate teams will commence training to-night at 7:30 o'clock, when the preliminary course in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium under the direction of Mr. J. J. Thompson, will be begun. Judging by the way the players answered the call to arms and turned up at the executive meeting last night, there will be no lack of material or of enthusiasm either. The juniors showed the way to the intermediates by turning out fourteen strong and with the two teams in attendance Mr. Thompson will have a squad of twenty-five or more on the floor to-night. Junior tickets were given out last night to the following: Howard Anderson, Mack O'Dette, Elric White, Frank Barrie, Rolly Weir, Chas. Manion, Grover Halpin, Frank Cassidy, Orville Kennedy, Arthur Heard, Alex. McFee, Art Hall, Harry Clancy and Chas Taber, while among the intermediates who have already received training tickets are Maurice Park, Fred Denison, Fred Kelly, W. Bearss, Anderson and Percy Bond. All players, intermediate or junior, who want to play the game this year are asked to be at the Y.M.C.A. at 7.30 o'clock to-night to begin training. There will be tickets at the building for those who did not receive them last night and every player is expected to be on hand. Bring a pair of lacrosse shoes with you and some kind of a gymnasium suit.

Wolgast Who Was To Have Fought To-night Successfully Operated On

LOS ANGELES, CAL., NOV. 29. — On the eve of a fight in which his title to the lightweight championship was at stake and for which he had brought himself supposedly to a state of physical perfection, Ad. Wolgast, lightweight champion pugilist of the world, to-night lies in Clara Barton hospital, recovering from an operation for the removal of his vermiform appendix. His fight with Freddie Walsh is off indefinitely.

The illness of Wolgast came suddenly. He retired last night after partaking of a hearty supper, feeling, he declared in fine fettle.

At 4 o'clock this morning Wolgast was in the hospital preparing for the operation.

Manager Jones, as soon as his protege was placed in the hospital, went to Venice for Mrs. Wolgast and Mrs. Jones. He stopped on the way at Freddie Welsh's training camp and told the English fighter the news.

"Well' that's too bad," said Welsh. "I don't care so much for the financial loss as I do for Ad. We were always good friends."

Dr. Pollard called in consultation Drs. Barton and Sherrard and it was decided that an operation was the only thing that could save Wolgast's life, and that it must be performed at once.

Manager Jones informed Wolgast, who said, "All right, Tom, I'll go through it; but, Tom, none of that sleeping stuff for me. Just tell them to strap me down tight and then go to it. I can stand it."

It was 9:30 a.m., when a nurse placed a sponge under the champion's nostrils and 45 minutes later the door of the operating room was again opened. Then the champion was wheeled back to his room and put in bed.

Dr. Pollard to-night said that the operation was entirely successful and that Wolgast would recover rapidly.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE

Annual Meeting Will be Held in the Y. M. C. A. on Monday Night

The annual meeting of the Mercantile Hockey League will be held on Monday night next, at 7.30 o'clock, in the Y. M. C. A. A full attendance of representatives is expected. All of last year's teams and any new teams desiring to enter being asked to send delegates. A successful season is looked forward to by the Mercantile Club this year. Among the new teams in line will be the Telephone Club's seven, which has already organized.

NEW ONES FOR CANADIANS

Montreal, Nov. 29.—George Kennedy announces that he has signed up Payan, the former Victoria player, who figured as an amateur on the Canadian team last year. This season Payan has taken the plunge and will become an out-and-out professional. Payan is still quite a youngster and should have a big season ahead of him this year. Kennedy has also signed Patsy Seguin, the City League star, who played on the champion team of the Garnets last winter. Seguin is small, but, like most small men, is very good. His weight—or the lack of it—has caused him to be overlooked by the majority of professional scouts, but Kennedy figures that, with new six-men-rule, and the change-at-any-time rule also in force, Seguin should be able to make good.

He Simply Smiled

TORONTO, NOV. 20.—Dr. Barton, the Physical Director of Toronto University, when spoken to this morning about the rumour from Ottawa to the effect that the Intercollegiate Rugby Union would drop out of the final competitions for the Grey Cup, just laughed. He said the matter had been brought up in the Intercollegiate for the last three seasons, but it had always been knocked on the head. The doctor believed that the suggestion had originated from McGill, but he was not sure. Anyway there was no chance of it being followed out; the Universities were quite satisfied with things as they were.

Dr. Barton gave some very good reasons why the Intercollegiate winners should take their place in the games for the Dominion championship. He pointed out that the game played by the Universities was a much more open one than that played by the city clubs, and was on that account much less dangerous to the players; and, furthermore, it had helped enormously in the last few years to make the game faster, and has had an effect on the style of play of other Unions. The old game, which won so many championships for the famous Hamilton Tigers, is fast disappearing, and this, he believed, was due alone to the wonderful showing made by the Intercollegiate winners of the past four years. They have proved to the satisfaction of all Rugby men that the fast passing combination game is superior to the old style line plunging, in which weight played the all important part and has given speed and combined work its proper place on the Rugby field.

Dr. Barton went on to say that the time would surely come when one of the City Unions would land the Dominion championship once more, but to do it they would have to follow the style of play adopted in the Intercollegiate, and when this was done the Colleges would feel that they had helped to some extent to put the game on a higher plane.

A "VERY BAD" MAN

(Lindsay Warder.)

There was a particularly bad man before His Worship P. M. Jackson this morning. The offender was captured at the G.T.R. station about 8 o'clock last evening. A 'phone message to Chief Chilton that drunken rough was in the ladies' waiting room, brought the officer and his assistant to the station.

It is stated that the offender was none other than a cousin of the notorious Bob Ford, who shot Frank James, a brother to the noted outlaw, Jesse. It took the united efforts of the two constables to land their charge underneath the fire hall. The services of a dray man was required upon which the desperado was loaded and held down by the peace officials until landed behind the bars.

During his trip down William St. oaths and imprecations were hurled against Chief Chilton and a threat that he would kill the chief if he had to remain around for one year to do so was made.

It may be in the memory of many citizens, the doings of this man about four months ago, and of his imprisonment on a charge of drunkenness. Through the humane feeling of a philanthropic gentleman of this town who paid his fine, and for which he gave in return ingratitude, he was granted his freedom, after lingering in jail for some days. Now he returns again and prepares to sweep everything high, wide and crooked until apprehended.

This morning he was led from the cell by Chief Chilton with a handcuff on one wrist, to the police office. He was asked to pay a fine of $50 or remain six months in the central prison. He will go to the latter place, and our chief may call his life his own for the next six months so far as this outlaw is concerned.

NEWS BITS

Toronto, November 29.—John Galbraith, whose name will be considered to-morrow as a Liberal candidate to oppose Dr. Godfrey, M.P.P., in West York, has an unique remedy for the liquor evil, which is to compel each drinker to take out a license. This, he claims, would lessen drinking to the vanishing point.

Lassoed Gasoline Keg From Flames.

Roswell, N.M., November 29. — While a bakery at Clovis was burning yesterday a cowboy's nerve and accuracy in throwing the lasso prevented the destruction of surrounding buildings and probably saved the lives of a number of people. He rode his broncho up within forty feet of the blazing building, lassoed a barrel of gasoline, and dragged it from the burning structure.

Leaves Luxury to Nurse in Labrador.

Boston, November 29.—To give up a life of luxury and become a nurse in one of Dr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell's hospitals in Labrador is the plan of Miss Amelia Forbes, daughter of the late G. Malcolm Forbes, the well known yachtsman and capitalist of Boston. At present Miss Forbes is training for her chosen profession in the Waltham Home for Nurses and when she completes her course she is to start for the north and begin her duties among the Eskimos, Indians and fishermen. Miss Forbes first became interested in the work of the Labrador Medical Mission while attending a lecture by Dr. Grenfell and she volunteered her services.

Named the Twins After Princess.

Toronto, November 29.—A row of about twenty tiny red faced babies in baskets ranged along the wall of the nursery of the Burnside Home delighted her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, who paid an informal visit to the General Hospital yesterday afternoon. Especial interest was manifested by the Duchess in girl twins, born three days ago, who were named by their mother, Mrs. James Ellis, after Princess Patricia Helena, daughter of the Duke and Duchess. One of the twins is called Patricia and the other Helena. Patricia weighs one pound and a half and Helena one pound and a quarter.

Beer Best Bait For Fly Tribe.

Cleveland, Ohio, November 29. — "The best bait on earth for flies is beer Bread and butter comes second, but beer attracts four times as many"

This is the statement of Dr. C. E. Ford, secretary of the city health board who has just received reports from the city six normal training school girls who last summer formed a "fly-swatting club" under his direction to investigation the best means of exterminating the fly. Over a million flies were "swatted" in the crusade that followed. The highest record for one girl for one day being 2,500. After a careful comparison of the reports made by the girls as to the most favourable conditions for trapping flies Dr. Ford says that "beer is the best bait on earth."

PLEADED GUILTY

McNamara Brothers Plead Guilty to Bomb Outrage

TO BE SENTENCED TUESDAY

Los Angeles, Dec. 2.—James B. McNamara pleaded guilty last evening of murder in the first degree in connection with the death of Charles J. Haggerty, a victim of The Los Angeles Times' explosion and fire.

His brother, John J. McNamara, jointly indicted with him, pleaded guilty to dynamiting the Llewellyn Iron Works.

They will be sentenced next Tuesday, Dec. 5.

James B McNamara probably will get life imprisonment. John J. McNamara, it was rumored, will get 14 years. Each pleaded guilty of the charge on which he was extradited from Indianapolis.

Within 15 minutes after court opened yesterday afternoon one of the greatest criminal trials of modern times had ended so abruptly that many of those supposedly in the heart of the matter did not know it was going to happen.

The prisoners were taken back to jail, Judge Walter Bordwell retired to his chambers and opposing counsel went to their rooms.

"The McNamaras have pleaded guilty because they are guilty," was District Attorney John D. Fredericks' crisp comment.

"If I had seen any way out of it, we would not have done it," said Attorney Clarence S. Darrow after court. "We have had it under consideration since a week ago Monday."

So far as has been learned less than a dozen men knew when court opened what was going to happen.

Judge Bordwell did not betray his information, but chatted with the reporters about the possibility of night sessions. Malcolm McLaren, representative of the detective agency which brought about the arrests, was denying a report that McManigal had refused to confess.

Fredericks brought his wife to court, and G. Ray Horton, W. Joseph Ford and S. L. Vermilya, his deputies, knew what was coming, as did counsel for the defence and for the prisoners. Samuel B. Brown, chief of the investigation for the state, and Larry M. Sullivan, an investigator for the defence. The jury was discharged at 3.10 p.m.

The eight sworn jurors and two talesmen passed for cause were brought to the courtroom at 3.05 to be discharged.

"The case," said Judge Bordwell, addressing them, "which you will not try, has come to an end. The defendant has pleaded guilty, so your valuable services will not be required."

The judge smiled, and some members of the jury applauded.

"I want to tell you that I am absolutely confident that you men would have given this man a fair and impartial trial."

John J. McNamara entered court unhandcuffed and took a seat a few feet away from his brother. Attorney James Scott sat with his arms around the prisoner. John J. was smiling and chewing gum.

Attorney Davis of the defence began: "After long consideration, your honor, we have concluded to withdraw the plea of guilty against James B. and would like to have John J. tried."

District Attorney Fredericks rose and the prisoner did likewise.

"You have been arraigned, Mr. Jas. B. McNamara," said Fredericks "and have heretofore entered a plea of not guilty."

"Did you answer guilty?"

"Yes," answered James B. McNamara.

"Do you wish now to plead against this indictment charging you with murder?"

"Yes."

"Guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty."

"Does the court now take up the other case against John J."

"Yes," replied the court.

The date for John J. McNamara's trial was placed at Dec. 5, and District Attorney Fredericks asked John J. to plead.

He did not plead with reference to the indictment against him in connection with The Los Angeles Times' explosion, but pleaded guilty to the indictment charging him with the explosion of the Llewellyn Iron Works.

Attorney Darrow stood around the room after court adjourned and newspapermen crowded around him.

"I am glad it's over with," said Darrow with a sigh. "We have been working on this for two weeks, and it has been the greatest strain of my life."

"The Times building was blown up by James B. McNamara with nitroglycerine to be sure, but the bomb touched off the gas, and gas really did it," said Mr. Darrow.

"Did you have to wrestle hard with the McNamara brothers to get that admission?" he was asked.

"Somewhat, but the facts have been overwhelming. Every loophole was gathered in by the state. As far as I am concerned, I felt that sooner or later it had to come. Things were happening in which big people were interested. The movement was impelling. They wanted the matter cleared up and feared further bloodshed unless we obliterated the incident from Los Angeles at once.

"Of course, I feel I have helped the McNamaras by getting them to plead in so far as they probably will not be sentenced to death. Life imprisonment will be meted out to James B. and John J. will get off with a light sentence."

A Personal Vindication.

Chicago, Dec. 2.—"I consider the outcome a great personal vindication for me," said Wm. J. Burns here yesterday when told by The Associated Press of the sensational developments in the McNamara case at Los Angeles. "Especially," he added, "after men occupying such exalted positions as Samuel Gompers and others have repeatedly charged me with 'planting' the dynamite at Los Angeles. Following them every Socialist paper in the country and every labor paper have so often printed stories of 'frame-ups' in the case that some good people were beginning to think that the prosecution was not 'on the square'."

Mother's Faith Unshaken.

Cincinnati, Dec. 2.—Had a bolt descended from a clear sky it could not have cast a greater shadow of gloom over the home of John J. and James B. McNamara in Cincinnati, than did the news of their pleas of guilty yesterday.

"I know my boys are innocent," wailed Mrs. Mary McNamara, their grief-stricken mother. "I am forced to believe that they have pleaded, but I know they are innocent."

Ultimatum Rejected.

Teheran, Persia, Dec. 2.—The National Council has rejected the Russian ultimatum by a big majority. The Foreign Minister has resigned.

A cablegram from British Foreign Minister, Sir Edward Grey, was presented to the Assembly, urgently advising compliance with the Russian demands, but some of the members pointed out that England's advice had hitherto only led to Persian humiliation. They believed that Sir Edward had been misinformed, and emphatically asserted that Russian injustice had become intolerable.

THE HOUSE RISES DEC. 7

Parliament Christmas Vacation Will Last Till January 9th

MR. MACLEAN'S PERIODICAL

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—"It is the grievances of the people and the rectification of those grievances within the limitations of the powers of this Parliament to which we should be directing our attention."

In these words W. F. Maclean (South York) criticised the debate on the address.

The great grievances of east as well as west, he said, were the excessive express rates, freight and passenger rates to which the people of Canada were subjected, as well as the urgent need of lower cable and telegraph rates and the control of the capitalization of companies.

The remedy for excessive express charges was the establishment of a parcel post system by the Postmaster-General following the lead set by the most progressive European countries.

State competition, he declared, was the only way to give relief where great private corporations exercised public functions.

Canada, he argued, should establish a state-owned cable to England. It was sound Imperial policy and would bring the cable monopoly to its knees and cut rates in two. Control of land telegraph lines by the Postoffice Department would follow as a necessary completion of the system.

Quite a brisk discussion took place on the announcement of the intention of the Government to transfer the annuities service to the Postoffice Department and dispense with lecturers.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster argued that it would mean a more widespread and efficient service at a minimum of cost.

The House passed the remaining estimates for 1911-12, and a supply bill was put through, all three readings, and passed.

Announcement was made that the House would adjourn on Dec. 7 (Thursday), and meet again on Jan. 9, but Mr. Borden agreed to consider the request of several members to postpone the latter date to Jan. 10.

Joseph Armstrong of East Lambton has given notice of a resolution calling for the appointment of a commission "to investigate the systems of national telegraphs and telephones, wireless telegraphs and cable, also postal conditions, laws and regulations, parcel post, means of collecting and distributing mails, with a view to submitting such data and information to the Postoffice Department as would help to improve existing conditions in all the above, and to further enquire into postal facilities in rural districts in other countries, in order that a better system of free rural mail delivery may be inaugurated."

U. S. Tariff Changes.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 2.—Representative Underwood, chairman of the Ways and Means committee, announced yesterday that he would call a meeting of the committee as soon as Congress convened to sound the sentiments of the members as to the tariff revisions program.

"The President," said Mr. Underwood, "will be given a reasonable time in which to submit the reports of the tariff board. If these are withheld too long, the committee will proceed without them. We are certain to submit bills on wool, cotton and iron and steel. The sugar schedule may come later."

Lieut. Montagu "Cashiered."

London, Dec. 2.—The commission of Herbert Montagu as a second lieutenant of the Fifth Battalion of the Royal Fusiliers, was cancelled in last night's issue of The London Gazette, his action in joining the Turkish forces in Tripoli being adjudged a breach of neutrality.

Lieut. Montagu sent a report to the English newspapers that the Italian soldiers had been guilty of horrible atrocities toward native women and children, of whom he declared many hundreds had been mutilated beyond recognition.

Maine Explosion External.

Havana, Dec. 2.—The board of survey which has been engaged with the raising of the battleship Maine has finished its inspection of the ill-fated vessel.

There is scant doubt that the result of the investigation will prove fully corroborative of the finding of the Sampson board of inquiry that the destruction of the Maine was due primarily to an extraneous explosion, succeeded by partial explosions of the forward magazine

Russia Advancing.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 2.—In consequence of the rejection by the Persian National Council of the Russian demands, Russia has ordered the Russian troops now concentrated at Resht, capital of the Persian Province of Ghilan, 16 miles from Enzeli, on the Caspian Sea, to advance on Teheran a march of about 150 miles.

Huge Loss of Fuel.

Chicago, Dec. 2.—American railroads lose $50,000,000 worth of fuel a year and consume $200,000,000 worth of coal to obtain $80,000,000 worth of efficiency, according to figures prepared by Chief Engineer E. C. Fish of the Chicago Great Western Railroad.

In ten years, says the report, American railroads have increased the cost of their fuel supply from $104,926,000 to $213,888,000.

LOYALLY WELCOMED.

Hamilton Pays Tribute to Their Royal Highnesses.

Hamilton, Dec. 2—The visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught was brought to a brilliant close last evening by the public reception at the court house.

About 1,500 invitations had been issued for the function, and the large court room was completely filled by Hamilton citizens. Only about 500 people chose to be presented to the royal couple, however, and these made their bows and curtesies in 57 varieties in less than half an hour.

Her Royal Highness was evidently fatigued by the day's activities, but the duke bowed and smiled, while the presentations were being made as if he enjoyed the proceedings.

The military formed a large portion of the assemblage, and the reception was largely a dress affair. All classes were present, however, and it may be said those who were presented to the royal couple were representative people. The civic banquet at the Royal Hotel early in the evening was attended by 200 guests, and was a brilliant success.

The various functions in connection with the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were carried off smoothly, and no trouble of any kind was experienced. The police under the direction of Chief Smith and Deputy Chief Whatley handled the crowd in a most satisfactory manner.

Ald. Dr. Davey and the reception committee carried out the program, which had been arranged for the entertainment of the royal visitors, without a hitch, and deserve a great deal of credit for the thorough manner in which the details of the entertainment were looked after. The royal couple left the city at 11.30 last night on their return trip to Ottawa.

Princess Pat Sails.

London, Dec. 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—An interested crowd, mostly of ladies, witnessed the departure of Princess Patricia of Connaught at Euston station yesterday. Prince Arthur and Princess Marie Louise, Earl Grey and the Hon. Dudley Ward, representing the Colonial Office, Lord Strathcona Countess Wemyess and Lady Muriel Page were there.

The princess is taking many Christmas presents and a bob sleigh for her own use.

Liverpool, Dec. 2.—Countess Derby and the Lady Mayoress met the Princess Patricia here and conducted her to the boat.

A HUMAN OSTRICH

Whitney Has His Head Buried in the Sands Says Rowell

HE QUOTES TORY ORGAN

Stratford, Dec. 2.—Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., spoke here last night in exposition of his platform, and in the interests of the Liberal candidate in this riding of North Perth, Mayor John Brown of Stratford. His address aroused great enthusiasm, and the hall was crowded.

"Do you want an ostrich for your Prime Minister?" asked Mr. Rowell, after quoting the editorial comment of The Ottawa Citizen, "the most influential Conservative paper in eastern Ontario," on Sir James Whitney's attitude on tax reform. He asked whether they did not think it time to turn out the "ostrich," as Sir James had shown himself, on not only tax reform, but on education, the development of New Ontario, and other matters affecting the welfare of the province, and to put in somebody who would walk with head erect, and eyes open to see what the people want and give it to them. He earnestly urged the electors to place Ontario alongside the progressive western provinces, which had stopped the iniquitous taxation system that discouraged the improvement of property.

Mr. Rowell declared strongly for freeing the liquor license administration from political interference. The audience cheered when he claimed he was not side-stepping any of these issues, as a local paper charged.

Alluding to Hon. Mr. Hanna's intended visit here to-night, Mr. Rowell referred to articles in The Toronto News and The Mail and Empire about the time his policy for a Central Licensing Board was announced, saying the Government was going shortly to do that very thing, and then told how Sir James had said he did not authorise any such statement.

"Sir James is catering to two extremes," declared Mr. Rowell, with reference to the bilingual school question and the divergent views expressed by his Cabinet. Sir James is seeking to secure the votes of both, and he dare not make a clean-cut statement on the questions I have asked."

SIEGE OF NANKING.

Rebels Are Knocking at Four Gates of Old City.

Shanghai, Dec. 2.—While Nanking early this morning still remains in the possession of the Imperial forces under command of Lieut.-Gen. Feng Kwoh Chang, the revolutionists are engaged in bombarding the city and knocking at its four gates, demanding admission. It is believed that much damage to the city has resulted from the bombardment. Large forces of rebel infantry are held in readiness to rush into the city if the guns make breaches in the walls.

Late Friday afternoon a delegation came outside the city and the firing ceased. It is reported that they carried a proposition of surrender, the necessity for which is now believed to be inevitable.

Gen. Feng, notwithstanding the willingness of the viceroy, Chang Jen Chun, and the tartar general to capitulate continues to hold out against such action and practically has made prisoners of them and established a complete military dictatorship.

For the last two weeks Gen. Feng has defied the efforts of the revolutionaries to take the city. The circumference of the walled city is 22 miles. The wall at various places is ninety feet high. It is built of solid masonry and is thirty feet thick. The four main gates to the city are at the principal points of the compass. Tai Ping Mon, the north gate, and Caho Yong Mon, the east gate, are commanded by Purple Hill on the northeast. Purple Hill is fortified and overlooks the entire city.

Gen. Feng inside the city commands 4,000 trained and loyal Shantung troops and some 2,000 old style Imperial troops.

A few foreigners still remain inside Nanking, including members of the Red Cross and the Japanese consul and his guards.

The revolutionaries are continually being reinforced with men and guns. At present their force approximates 15,000 men and there is among them every evidence of an animated determination to take Nanking.

Pukow, across the Yangtse River from Nanking, is garrisoned with 15,000 of Feng's troops.

Lady Teacher Goes to Jail.

Brockville, Dec. 2.—Weeping bitterly, Miss Nora McCrea, a young school teacher, whose home is in Merrickville, yesterday afternoon received a sentence of one week in the local jail, from Judge McDonald, senior judge of Leeds and Grenville, for having last October unlawfully punished Helen McCoubrie, one of her pupils, in the school which she taught near Frankville.

The child was in the first instance severely punished for dropping a water bottle and when subsequently she brought to school a note of protest from her father by adoption, the school teacher punished her again. Mr McCoubrie was subsequently paid $500 by Miss McCrea in settlement of the case and to avoid parental prosecution, but Mr Trail, agent of the local Children's Aid Society, brought the matter to trial.

Miss McCrea testified that the child was unruly. Judge McDonald, however, found the defendant guilty.

Miss McCrea, who comes of a highly respected family, feels her position very keenly.

Q. What is astigmatism of the eye?
A. Astigmatism is an uneven curvature of the eye and causes a double focus. As the eye always strives for clear vision, this double focus annoys the brain, and causes headache and nervousness. We make lenses called cylinders to correct astigmatism.
Q. What causes double vision?
A. Double vision is caused by the eye not being in line, that is, one may turn up or have a tendency to do so, or both may turn in, a weak muscular system is the cause, a weak nervous system is back of it all.
We would be pleased to have you call and let us fully explain how such conditions can be relieved by glasses.

Test For Orientals.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—The British Columbia members are advocating that the Government adopt the Natal act as the best method of handling the Oriental problem. The Natal act provides for an educational test; and calls for the immigrant to be able to read or write in any European language. The act was passed once by British Columbia Legislature, but was disallowed as outside of its province.

The deputation of Hindus who are in Ottawa asking that their wives be admitted to Canada and that the present restrictions be abolished, will hold their final conference with the Minister of Interior to-day. It is understood that the Minister of the Interior takes the stand that it is only human they should be allowed to have their wives and children enter. Particularly as the Sikhs are British subjects and old British soldiers. They will be permitted to enter under strict regulations. The present restrictions as to immigration, however, will not be changed. The Government will likely take the whole question up with the Imperial authorities.

A leading offical of the U. S. Steel Corporation so declared yesterday afternoon while discussing the next step in the case, which will be taken.

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Madame de Melbain would like to talk to you for a few moments," she said quietly. "Afterwards, will you come on to the terrace?"

She swept away through the open window, and was at once followed by the Baron. Mademoiselle de Courcelles was playing very softly on a grand piano in an unseen corner of the apartment. Wrayson and his hostess were alone.

She turned towards him with a faint smile. She spoke with great deliberation, but very clearly, and there was in her voice some hidden quality, indefinable in words, yet both musical and singularly attractive.

"I shall not keep you very long Mr. Wrayson," she said. "Louise has been talking to me about you. She is happy, I think, to have found a friend so chivalrous and so discerning."

Wrayson smiled doubtfully as he answered.

"It is very little that I have been able to do for her," he said. "My complaint is that she will not give me the opportunity of doing more."

"You are too modest," Madame de Melbain said slowly. "Louise has told me a good deal. I think that you have been a very faithful friend."

Wrayson bowed but said nothing. If Madame de Melbain had anything to say to him, he preferred to afford her the opportunity of an attentive silence.

"Louise and I," Madame de Melbain continued, "were school friends. So you see that I have known her all my life. She has had her troubles, as I have! Only mine are a righteous judgment upon me, and hers she has done nothing to deserve. It is the burden of others which she fastens upon her back."

Wrayson felt instinctively that his continued silence was what she most desired. She was speaking to him, but her eyes had travelled far away. It was as though she had come into touch with other and greater things.

"Louise has not told me everything," she continued. "There is much that she will not confess. So it is necessary, Mr. Wrayson, that I ask you a question. Do you care for her?"

"I do!" Wrayson answered simply.

"You wish to marry her?"

"To-morrow, if she would!"

Madame de Melbain leaned a little forward. Her cheeks were still entirely colourless, but some spark of emotion glittered in her full dark eyes.

"You will be alone with her presently. Try and persuade her to marry you at once. There is nothing but an absurd scruple between you! Remember that always."

"It is a scruple which up till now has been too strong for me," Wrayson remarked quietly.

She measured him with her eyes, as though making a deliberate estimate of his powers.

"A man," she said, "should be able to do much with the woman whom he cares for—the woman who cares for him."

"If I could believe that," he murmured.

She shrugged her shoulders slightly. He understood the gesture.

"You are right," he declared, with more confidence. "I will do my best."

She moved her head slowly, a sign of assent, also of dismissal. He rose to his feet.

"Louise is on the terrace," she said. "Will you give me your arm? The Baron is there also. We will join them."

They stepped through the high French windows on to the carpeted terrace. It seemed to Wrayson that they had passed into a veritable land of enchantment. The service of dinner had been a somewhat leisurely affair, and the hour was already late. The moon was slowly rising behind the trees, but the landscape was at present wrapped in the soft doubtful obscurity of a late twilight. The flowers, with whose perfume the air was faintly fragrant, remained unseen, or visible only in blurred outline; the tall trees, whose tops were unstirred by even the slightest breeze, stood out like silent sentinels against the violet sky. Madame de Melbain stopped short upon the threshold of the terrace, with head slightly thrown back, and half-closed eyes.

"Suzanne was right," she murmured, "there is peace here—peace, if only it would last!"

The Baron came hastily forward. He seemed to be eyeing Wrayson a little doubtfully. Madame de Melbain pointed down the avenue.

"I think," she said, "that it would be pleasant to walk for a little way. Give me your arm, Baron. We will go first. Mr. Wrayson will follow with Louise."

They descended the steps, crossed the lawn, and through a gate into the broad grass-grown avenue, cut through the woods to the road. Wrayson at first was silent, and Louise seemed a little nervous. More than once she started at the sound of a rabbit scurrying through the undergrowth. There was something a little mysterious about the otherwise profound silence of the impenetrable woods. Even their footsteps fell noiselessly upon the spongy turf.

Wrayson spoke at last. They had fallen sufficiently far behind the others to be out of earshot.

"Do you know what Madame de Melbain has been saying to me?" he asked.

Louise turned her head a little. There was the faintest flicker of a smile about her lips.

"I cannot imagine," she declared, looking once more straight ahead.

"She has been inciting me to bold deeds," Wrayson said. "How should you like to be carried off in mediaeval fashion—married, willing or unwilling?"

"Is that what Madame de Melbain has been recommending you to do?" she asked.

He nodded.

"Yes! And I am thinking of taking her advice," he said coolly.

She laughed quietly, yet his ears were quick, and he caught the note of sadness which a moment later crept into her eyes.

"It would solve so much that is troublesome, wouldn't it?" she remarked. "May I ask if that has been the sole topic of your conversation?"

"Absolutely! Louise! Dear!"

She turned a little towards him. His voice was compelling. The fingers of her hand closed readily enough upon his, and the soft touch thrilled him.

"You have some fancy in your brain," he said, in a low, passionate whisper. "It is nothing but a fancy, I am assured. You have heard what your own friend has advised. You don't doubt that I love you, Louise, that I want to make you happy."

She leaned a little towards him. A sudden wave of abandonment seemed to have swept over her. He drew her face to his and kissed her with a sudden passion. Her lips met his soft and unresisting. Already he felt the song of triumph in his heart. She was his! She could never be anybody else's now! Very softly she disengaged herself. The other two were still in sight, and already the curve of the moon was creeping over the trees.

"Don't spoil it," she murmured. "Don't talk of to-morrow, or the future! We have to-night . . ."

There followed minutes of which he took no count, and then of a sudden her hand clutched his arm.

"Listen!" she whispered hoarsely.

He came suddenly down to earth. They were walking in the shadow of the trees, close to the side of the wood, and their footsteps upon the soft turf was noiseless. Wrayson almost held his breath as he leaned towards the dark chaos of the thickly planted trees. Only a few yards away he could distinctly hear the dry snapping of twigs. Some one was keeping pace with them inside the wood, now he could see the stooping figure of a man creeping stealthily along. A little exclamation broke from Louise's lips.

"It is a spy after all," she muttered. "They said that every entrance to the place was guarded."

Wrayson had time to take only one quick step towards the wood, when a shrill cry rang out upon the still night. Then there was the trampling under foot of bushes and undergrowth, the soun dof men's voices, one English and threatening, the other guttural and terrified. Madame de Melbain and her escort had paused and were looking back. Louise was moving towards them, and Wrayson was on the point of entering the wood. Into the little semi-circle formed by these four people, there suddenly strode Wrayson's friend from the inn, grasping by the collar a shrinking and protesting figure in a much dishevelled tweed suit.

"We were right, Mr. Wrayson," the former remarked quietly. "This fellow has been spying round all day. You had better ask your friends what they wish done with him."

CHAPTER XXVIII

There followed a few minutes of somewhat curious silence. At the first sound of the voice of the man who had made so startling an appearance in their midst, a cry, only half suppressed, had broken from Madame de Melbain's lips. She had moved impulsively a little forward; the moon, visible now from over the tree tops, was shining faintly upon her absolutely colourless face and dilated eyes. For some reason she seemed terror-stricken, both she and Louise, who was clinging now to her arm. Neither of them seemed even to have glanced at the cowering figure of the man, who had relapsed now into a venomous silence. Both of them were gazing at his captor, and upon their faces was the strangest expression which Wrayson had ever seen on any human features. It was as though they stood upon the edge of the world and peered downwards, into the forbidden depths; as though they suddenly found themselves in the presence of a thing so wonderful that thought and speech alike were chained. Wrayson involuntarily followed the direction of their rapt gaze. The stranger certainly presented a somewhat formidable appearance. He was standing upon slightly higher ground, and the massive proportions of his tall powerful figure stood out with almost startling distinctness against the empty background. His face was half in the shadow, yet it seemed to Wrayson that some touch of the mystery which was quivering in the drawn face of the two women was also reflected in his dimly-seen features. Something indefinable was in the air, something so mysterious and wonderful, that voices seemed stricken dumb, and life itself suspended. An owl flew slowly out from the wood with ponderous flapping of wings, and sailed over their heads. Every one started—Madame de Melbain gave a half-stifled shriek. The strain was over. Louise and she were half sobbing now in one another's arms.

"I will leave this fellow to be dealt with as the owners of the chateau may direct," the stranger said stiffly, turning to Wrayson. "You can tell them all that we know about him."

He turned on his heel, but the Baron laid his hand upon his shoulder and peered into his face inquisitively.

"We should like to know," he said, "whom we have to thank for the capture of this intruder!"

"I am a stranger here, and to all of you," was the quiet answer. "You owe me no thanks. I have seen something of this fellow before," he added, pointing to his captive, who was now standing sullenly in the centre of the group. "I felt sure that he was up to no good, and I watched him."

For the first time the fair-haired little tourist, who had been dragged so submissively into their midst, suffered a gleam of intelligence to appear in his face. He changed his position so that he could see his captor better.

"Ah!" he muttered, "you have seen me before, eh? And I you, perhaps! Let me think! Was it——"

Wrayson's friend leaned a little forward, and with the careless ease of one flicking away a fly, he struck the speaker with the back of his hand across the face. The blow was not a particularly severe one, but its victim collapsed upon the turf.

"Look here," his assailant said, standing for a moment over him, "you can go on and finish your sentence if you like. I only want to warn you, that if you do, I will break every bone in your body, one by one, the next time we meet. Go on, if you think it worth while."

The man on the ground was dumb, because he was afraid. But the same thought presented itself to all of them. The Baron, who was least of all affected, expressed it.

"Perhaps, sir," he said, "you will not object to telling me—the Baron de Courcelles—whom we have to thank for the discovery of this—intruder!"

Wrayson's friend edged a little away. There was no response in his manner to the courtesy with which the Baron had sought to introduce himself.

"You have nothing to thank me for," he said shortly. "My name would be quite unknown to you, and I am leaving this part of the world at once. Permit me to wish you good-evening."

He first already turned on his heel when Madame de Melbain's voice arrested him. Clear and peremptory, the first words which had passed her lips since the surprise had come to them, seemed somehow to introduce a new note into an atmosphere from which an element of tragedy had never been lacking.

"Please stop!"

He turned and faced her with obvious unwillingness. She stretched out her hand as though forbidding him to go, but addressed at the same time the two men, apparently gamekeepers, who had suddenly emerged from the wood.

"Monsieur Robert," she said, "we have caught this man trespassing in the woods here, notwithstanding the precautions which I understood you had taken. Take him away at once, if you please. I trust that you will be able to hand him over to the gendarmes."

Monsieur Robert, the steward of the estates, an elderly man, whose face was twitching with anxiety, stepped forward with a low bow.

"Madame," he said, "we had word of this intrusion. We were even now upon the track of this ruffian. There was another, also, who climbed the wall—ah! I see him! The Englishman there!"

"He is our friend," Madame de Melbain said. "You must not interfere with him."

"As Madame wills! Come, you rascal," he added, gripping his prisoner by the shoulder. "We will show you what it means to climb over walls and trespass on the estate of Madame la Baronne. Come then!"

The intruder accepted the situation with the most philosophic calm. Only one remark he ventured to make as he was led off.

"It is not hospitable, this! I only wished to see the chateau by moonlight!"

Wrayson's fellow guest at the Lion d'Or turned to follow them.

"The fellow might try to escape," he muttered; but again Madame de Melbain called to him.

"You must not go away," she said, "yet!"

Then she moved forward with smooth, deliberate footsteps, yet with something almost supernatural in her white face, and set, dilated eyes. It was as though she were looking once more through the windows of the world, as though she could see the figures of dead men playing once more their part in the game of life. And she looked always at the Englishman.

"Listen," she said, "there is something about you, sir, which I do not understand. Who are you, and where do you come from?"

He made no answer. Only he held out his hand as though to keep her away, and drew a little further back.

"You shall not escape," she continued, the words leaving her lips with a sort of staccato incisiveness, crisp and emotional. "No! you are here, and you shall answer. Who are you who come here to mock us all: because it is a dead man who speaks with your voice, and looks with your eyes? You will not dare to say that you are Duncan Fitzmaurice!"

The figure in the shadows seemed to loom larger and larger. He was no longer shrinking away.

"I know nothing of the man of whom you speak!" he declared. "I am a wanderer. I have no name and no home!"

Madame de Melbain reeled and would have fallen. Then for a moment events seemed to leap forward. White and fainting she lay in the arms of the man who had sprung to her succour, yet through her half-opened eyes there flashed a strange and wonderful light—a light of passionate and amazing content. He held her almost roughly, for several moments, yet his lips were pressed to hers with a tenderness almost indescribable. No one of the little group moved. Wrayson felt simply that events, impossible for him to understand, had marched too quickly for him. He stood like a man in a dream, whose limbs are rigid, whose brain alone is working. And the others, too, seemed to have become part of a silent and wonderful tableau. For years after, Wrayson carried with him the memory of those few minutes, the perfume from the woods, faint but penetrating; the shadowy light, the passionate faces of the man and the woman, the woman yielding to a beautiful dream, and the man to a moment of divine madness. Movement, when it came, came from the principal actors in that wonderful scene. Madame de Melbain was alone, supported in Louise's arms, the Englishman's heavy footsteps were already audible crashing through the undergrowth. Louise pointed to the wood and called out to Wrayson—

Many Years an Invalid—Untold Agony From Headaches

Dizziness, Sinking Spells and Excessive Weakness Disappear With Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nearly every woman will read with interest the letter of Mrs. Geo. Bradshaw, quoted below. It tells of years of great suffering from nervous Headache and other symptoms arising from weak, watery blood and a starved and exhausted condition of the nervous system.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Cosy Nook, Harlowe, Ont., writes. "I am glad to state that I received benefits from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food which I failed to get any place else. I was troubled for many years, in fact from my early womanhood, with weak, watery blood, and given to dropsy. I suffered untold agonies from nervous sick headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, in fact was a semi-invalid for many years. I tried many kinds of patent medicines and got no help, and tried every new doctor that came along, but all failed to help me. Doctors told me I had no blood, and that my heart and kidneys were diseased, and that I had so many complaints there was not much use in doctoring up one or two. Four years ago I took six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and was glad to see I felt better, and then got six more, and they have cured me of many of my complaints. When I began taking Nerve Food I weighed 110 pounds and to-day I weigh 139, and am 45 years old.

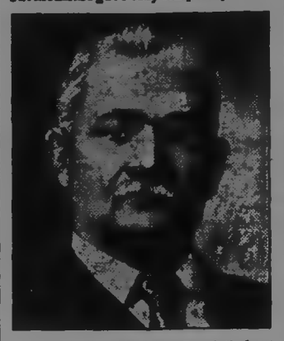
"For many years, I suffered tortures from Indigestion and Dyspepsia. Two years ago, I was so bad that I vomited my food constantly. I also suffered with Constipation. I consulted physicians, as I was afraid the disease was cancer, but medicine gave only temporary relief.



I read in the 'Maritime Baptist' about 'Fruit-a-tives' and the cures this medicine was making and I decided to try it. After taking three boxes, I found a great change for the better and now I can say 'Fruit-a-tives' has entirely cured me when every other treatment failed, and I reverently say "Thank God for 'Fruit-a-tives'."

A SILVER CIGARETTE CASE

A Short Story

By Morris Healey

"Well, what answer are you going to make?"

"Oh, Norman, I can't do it—really I can't!" Ailsa Crossely murmured. Tears stood in her wide open grey eyes, and her red lips quivered. She hated to refuse anything to the brother she idolized, but this thing she could not do. "Don't be cross with me, Norman, dear,' she whispered. "You know there is nothing I would not do for you. Anything else—" Norman drew his arm away with an angry exclamation.

"Anything that would cost you nothing,' he snarled. "That is about the extent of your devotion. It matters little to you that my life is ruined if you do not take this chance. I refused a place in Golding's works in the hope that you would marry Page. He would be sure to give me a partnership if you did. He would never have his brother-in-law working as a mere clerk in his office. You know I would never ask you to marry him if he wasn't a thoroughly good chap. There isn't a more popular or better tempered man in Carton. But, please yourself; don't let me influence you, but for pity's sake don't come whining to me about your devotion. You don't care a fig whether I get on or not."

"But I do," Ailsa protested tearfully. "Indeed I do, Norman."

"I don't believe it,' he replied sharply. "If you did you wouldn't be so ready to ruin my chances with a word." He flung out of the room with that, and Ailsa was left to read and re-read Rupert Page's note. It was a manly and straightforward declaration of his love, and Ailsa felt an involuntary respect for the writer as she read it. He would never stoop to suc hdeception as she was contemplating.

All her lifetime she had given way o Norman, had done her best to give him what he wanted. Insensibly he had come to expect it of her, and now he did not scruple to ask the sacrifice of her young life. It did not occur to Ailsa to think of it in that way. She could quite see Norman's point of view, but she decided that he couldn't understand about the matter. Hastily drawing paper and pen towards her, she wrote a prim little note in which she informed Rupert Page that, after duly considering his offer she ha ddecided to make him as happy as he evidently hoped to be. Rupert Page smiled tenderly as he read her note half an hour later.

"Dear little soul," he murmured "Dear, quaint little Ailsa!" Shall I go to see her now? Will she be watching for me with her sweet, wide grey eyes?" Of course he went. Rupert was very much in love with his clerk's pretty sister, and it had never entered his wildest dreams that she could accept him from mercenary motives. True, he was rich and she was poor, but no one who knew Ailsa would ever suspect that she would marry for money.

"And are you sure you really love me, Ailsa?" Rupert asked fondly.

Ailsa's eyes widened and darkened. Must she add untruth to the wrong she had done? Then she called her courage to her aid, and forced a light laugh. "Would I have said yes if I didn't?" she asked.

Rupert kissed her masses of burnished hair, and held her face up to the light. "Poor, pale little Ailsa," he said tenderly. "Shall we be married quite soon, Ailsa, and go abroad for a time? We must get some colour back into those pale cheeks."

Ailsa's cheeks were crimson now. She had thought that she might be engaged for quite a long time. But she would have to go through with it. "If you like," she said. "You seem to have learnt my name pretty well."

"Ailsa" he repeated as though he lied the sound of it. "I've been calling you that in my heart for weeks now. Didn't you ever think of me as Rupert?" Ailsa shook her head.

"I' mafraid I shall still think of you as Mr. Page," she said.

"All you want is a little practice," he assured her. "When you have called me Rupert about fifty times you will begin to think of me as Rupert. And about this trip? I thought of doing the CContinent and then going to Egypt. You would like that?"

Like it! The colour rose to Ailsa's cheeks and her eyes dilated. If he could only know how she had longed for that very trip! "But the works?" she objected. "How could you leave them?"

"Oh, they would manage all right I would leave your brother in charge, you know. I ought to offer him a partnership, I think. He will be my wife's brother, you see. You are very fond of Norman, aren't you, dyar?"

"Yes," she said faintly. "You know Norman and I have been alone in the world since we were children."

"Yes, I know," he said. "And I know how bravely you have struggled you two. Norman tells me you are a famous little housekeeper. If I was a poor man that accomplishment would come in very handy."

"I wish you were," Ailsa breathed passionately.

"My dear girl, what difference does it make? It doesn't matter whether we are poor or rich, so long as we love each other."

"No," Ailsa said vaguely. "Of course not." She was wishing with all her heart that she might tell him the truth. He might, and probably would, despise her, but it would be better than deceiving him. But then Norman's face of anger rose before her, and she shivered. When he had gone Ailsa waited in feverish impatience for Norman's return. He would be so pleased when she told him her news. Tea was ready when she heard Norman's step, but she hardly waited for him to close the door behind him before she rushed to him.

"I've done it, Norman," she cried eagerly. "I've accepted Mr. Page, and he says he'll give you a partnership. I hated having to do it, but it was for your sake, Norman," she concluded wistfully.

"Be quiet, can't you," Norman hissed in her ear as he pushed her away. Then Ailsa gave a low, sobbing cry, for behind Norman stood Rupert white to the lips. He had heard every word. Ailsa covered her face with her hands. She could not face the stern condemnation in his blue eyes. With a low moan she fled from the room, leaving the two men facing each other. Straight out of the house she ran, ino the little summer house at the end of the garden. She could weep undisturbed. For some minutes she sobbed unrestrainedly, then she saw a silver cigarette case lying on the table and picked it up. It bore the initials R.P, and Ailsa remembered that she had seen Rupert use it often.

With an impulsive gesture she laid it to her lips, and with a blinding flash she realized the cause of her sorrow. She loved Rupert, and it was because she loved him and not because Norman had lost his chance, that she was grieving. "My dear, my dear," she moaned, covering the case with passionate kisses. "I love you so, and now you know what I have done you will hate me. Oh, I can't bear it."

"Do you mean just that, Ailsa?" she heard a quiet voice ask. Ailsa sprang to her feet.

"Why have you followed me?" she demanded. "Couldn't you leave me alone? You now now why I accepted you, you know every little bit about it. Can't you leave me? Here is your cigarette case." She pushed the case towards him with a hand that trembled and he took the case and her hand into his strong hands together. "Yes, I'll go," he said. "But you will first tell me why you were weeping on it. Yes, it is quite wet," as Ailsa would have denied his assertion. "Then I want to know who it is that you love."

Ailsa hung her head and was silent. "Tell me, Ailsa," the quiet, compelling voice insisted. "You are cruel," Ailsa burst out. "If yo uheard me just now you know it is—you." Her voice dropped so low that he could hardly hear it. "Can't you see how bitterly ashamed I am? I would ask you to forgive me, but—" But Rupert had heard enough.

"You love me?" he cried exultantly, as he took her in his arms. "There's nothing to forgive if you love me."

"But I didn't love you all the time," Ailsa said. "It was only when I thought I was going to lose you that I knew. Oh, Rupert, you're sure it isn't just because you heard what I said, and are sorry for me?"

"No," said Rupert, "it is because I'm so sorry for myself without you."

"I'm glad you know the truth," Ailsa said soberly

"And are you not glad you know it yourself?" he declared, fingering the wet case. "Ailsa, darling, aren't you the happiest girl alive?"

With the tears still wet on her cheek Ailsa confessed that she was, and some weeks later the bride's present to the bridegroom took the form of a silver cigarette case—to replace one she could never part with.

TO HALTER BREAK COLT

The proper time to halter break the colt is just when it is a few weeks old and easily handled. When riding along a country road in Peel Co., Ont., recently, I saw a sight that gave me the idea for this letter to Farm and Dairy. On one side of a ditch was a big yearling Clydesdale colt with a halter on his head, and on the other end of the rope and on the other side of the ditch were three strong men trying to persuade it by forcible means that the ditch was neither too wide nor too deep for it to get over. After a great deal of pulling and hauling the colt was forcibly dragged into the ditch and up on to the other bank.

Had that colt, when two weeks old, been halter broken it would have followed anywhere without any difficulty. We are laying up trouble for ourselves when we allow a colt to attain strength far beyond that of the average man before we start to halter break it. If the young thing learns from the first that man is master there is no further difficulty.

Fell 12 Storeys, But Still Lives.

New York, November 29.—Ernest Du Pont, a rigger, fell from a crossbeam on the twelfth floor of a building under construction on West Fiftieth street, to the bottom of a well in the cellar and lived. He landed on a sack of empty cement bags. Fellow workmen went to the basement expecting to find Du Pont crushed and lifeless form. Instead they found him conscious and squirming around on the bags. Dr. Critchfield from Flower Hospital said the rigger's skull was fractured, but at the hospital it was said Du Pont would probably recover.

Suffered With Nerve Trouble For Two Years.

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO SLEEP.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be sound while the ne vous system alone may be diseased, therefore it is necessary for anyone suffering from any nervous trouble to procure a remedy which will at once quieten the nerves and build up the system.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will do this for you, providing you give them a fair trial.

Mr. Chas. W. Wood, Montreal, Que., writes—"For two years I had suffered with nerve trouble, and it was impossible for me to sleep. It did not matter what time I went to bed, in the morning I was even worse than the night before. I consulted a doctor, and he gave me a tonic to take a half hour before going to bed. It was all right for a time, but the old trouble returned with greater force than before. One of the boys, who works with me, gave me half a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took them and I got such satisfaction that I got another box, and before I finished it I could enjoy sleep from 10 p.m until 6 a.m., and now feel good."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

IRISH PARLIAMENT AS IT SHOULD BE

John Redmond's Forecast Does Not Provide For Violent Scenes.

In a speech at Norwich, Mr. Redmond gave his forecast of an Irish Parliament in being. The assembly would include, he said, men of all creeds, professional men, representatives of science, art, and literature, precluded from serving at Westminster.

Those who were looking out for violent scenes—(laughter)—for extravagant language, or revolutionary proposals would be woefully disappointed. Their proceedings would be prosaic and humdrum in the last degree.

They would be engaged on the work of endeavoring to put their house in order in a quiet and businesslike manner, just as the new country councils in Ireland in the year 1898 addressed themselves to the work of country government.

There was the reform of the poor law, which was a system forced upon Ireland, and quite unsuited to her conditions and which, for the last seventy years had been rotten from top to bottom and extravagant, demoralising, and hateful. They in the Irish Parliament would not be talking about Dreadnoughts, or about entering into diplomatic relations with the Tsar of Russia or the Sultan of Turkey. (Laughter.)

Another question which a national Parliament would deal with was cheap means of transit. To manage 3,000 miles of railways in Ireland now there were 261 directors—(laughter) and the principal manager of one of the English railways had told him that alone he could manage all the railways of Ireland and have two days a week for by-fishing for himself.

They in Ireland had the least progressive railways in Europe, prohibitive freights, and until something was done to deal with the Irish railways it was hopeless to expect a genuine industrial revival. Then primary and secondary education in Ireland was in a deplorable condition, and yet the Imperial Parliament could not deal with it, if for no other reason than because it had no time. Arterial drainage could not be attended to by the Imperial Parliament.

There were these and other things they wanted to discuss in an Irish Parliament, and could any sane Englishman say that the Empire would be in danger, or that the Protestant religion would be destroyed, if they in their own little local Parliament in Ireland were given the right of settling such questions for themselves?

"Mind you," he continued, "that is all we are asking, and that is all that Home Rule means. We declare that we are only asking for a local Parliament subject to the unimpaired supremacy of the Imperial Parliament for the transaction of purely Irish local affairs. We disclaim with ridicule the charge that we are separatists. What we are asking leaves you as strong, far stronger than you are to-day, to deal with any demand for separation in the future."

SPEECHES OF KING GEORGE

Tribute to Men on the Outposts of Empire—Hard Service Required From the Sons of Britain.

Loyalty of the Empire, a keen knowledge of the work needed to keep it intact, full appreciation of the devotion of those who do so much to that end without the public knowing anything of it, and a perfect faith in religion as the sheet-anchor of the nation—all these appear vividly in the volume of the King's speeches published by Messrs. Williams and Norgate under the title of "The King to His People."

Speaking of India at the Guildhall, His Majesty said: "With the King and Queen just finishing their preparation for their voyage to India for the Delhi Durbar a speech on our great Eastern dependency which His Majesty made at the Guildhall will be read with special interest. In the course of it he said:

I have learnt to appreciate the fact that India cannot be regarded as one country. . . . Quitting Bombay in tropical heat, my thoughts carry me from there over hundreds of miles, almost as far as from London to Constantinople, to the rigorous climate of the Khyber Pass. . . .

At Lundi Kotal, the further entrance of the Pass, five British officers and a regiment of Afridis—that tribe which only a few years ago was fighting against us—now garrison this lonely outpost. To the historic stronghold of Ali Musjid came the elading Khans, each bringing offerings of goodwill in the shape of the pick of their flocks of sheep, and the finest specimens of their honey. . . .

But, among all these varied and striking impressions, none have stirred our hearts as did the Ridge at Delhi, and the grounds and ruins of the Lucknow Residency.

His Majesty added a tribute of thanks to Lord Curzon for his preservation of the priceless architectural monuments of the country. . . .

The defence of Lucknow calls up memories of the defence of Ladysmith, where the banner of England was kept flying, as the King said on his visit, "heroically and with dogged resolve," adding:—

The sacrifices have not been in vain. Never in our history did the pulse of the Empire beat more in unison, and the blood which has been shed on the veldt has sealed for ever our unity.

Not only does King George show his appreciation of the men who have fought and bled for their country—he is equally mindful of the heroism of those who struggle not against their fellow-men, but against the forces of Nature. This it was that led him to express his sympathy with Lieut. Shackleton's "terrible hardships," when he handed him the Royal Geographical Society's medal, with pride in his achievements "as a brother sailor."

"Terrible hardships," yes, but, as King George reminded the Eton boys last July, "The British Empire requires at the present time hard services from all its sons," whether in carrying on the education of the metropolis, "never more efficiently conducted than at the present," or in fighting the White Plague, and teaching the patient in the sanatorium "how to live cleanly, soberly and healthily," or in encouraging rifle shooting throughout the Empire.

His Majesty's interest in the children, to whom we must look as future upholders of the Empire, was further shown in a speech in connection with the Wales and Strand Society two years ago:—

"To those who treasure with affection the happy memories of childhood, it is difficult to realise how in our very midst there are little ones to whom the joy of home and the love of parents are unknown, and we thank God for the work of this society which finds for these young, ill-fated fellow-beings new homes, good influences, and gives them a fresh start in life."

All will remember, too, the kindly thought which resulted in the entertainment of 100,000 children at the Crystal Palace last summer, when Their Majesties walked among and chatted with their little guests.

The King's deep religious convictions are plainly shown in a speech on the "Perfect Standard.":—

"I am fortified by the belief that the ends which we pursue will be achieved only while we seek in faith and humility that perfect standard of conduct and sacrifice which has been revealed to Christian men."

These words show how fully His Majesty believes that the Church is the foundation on which all else must rest.

AN AUTHOR'S GOLD FISH

His Dream That it Was Dead Proved True.

A Paris paper publishes the following story concerning Signor Gabriele d'Annuzio, the famous author:

"When he was finishing at Versailles his play 'Saint Sebastien,' d'Annuzio had on his table a bowl containing a gold fish which he loved because of its profound silence and small size. When he had to proceed to Italy on business the poet was sad because he had to leave the faithful witness of his literary labors. He desired to assure the fish of a happy existence during his absence, and he asked the manager of the hotel at which he stayed to take care of it. The manager of the hotel received the following telegram from Gabriele d'Annuzio:—'I have had a frightful dream to-night. I have seen my fish dead. Is it true?' The manager smiled and immediately sent the poet a reassuring telegram. Afterwards, becoming a little uneasy he went into the office where the bowl containing the fish had been placed and found that it was dead."

STRANGE MARRIAGE STORY

The Wonderful Ending of a Secret Wedding.

A well-dressed young woman told an English magistrate a remarkable story of a secret marriage and subsequent desertion.

She said that a year ago she met a man, and after a short acquaintance he asked her to accompany him to Canada and there be married to him. She consented and they were married directly they reached Canada. Three weeks later he deserted her, and she came home again.

A month later her husband followed her, and they lived together again. He was soon discharged as cured, but sane, and was removed to an asylum. He was soon discharged as curdd, but he refused to live with her again, and his father took her to live with him.

Her husband had now gone back to Canada, and she had received a letter from him that morning telling her he did not wish to have anything more to do with her. She asked the magistrate if she could take proceedings against him.

The missionary said he had inquired into the case, and the girl's story was perfectly true. He had seen the man's father, who told him that his son was insane, and not responsible for his actions when he married the girl.

The magistrate said that the only course open to the applicant was to make herself chargeable to the parish, and let the guardians take action.

THE WHIRL OF DEATH

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman in the United States and Great Britain.)

Although the authorities on both sides of the water hushed up the affair to the best of their ability, a few persons are cognizant of the facts relating to Benedict Shay, the celebrated inventor. He was brought to trial in England under the name he had assumed—which is immaterial here—and, being found insane by the jury, was sentenced to Broadmoor, "pending his majesty's pleasure," which means that he will spend the remainder of his life in that excellent asylum which England maintains for her insane criminals. That the prisoner was Shay was known to less than a dozen persons, of whom Crewe and myself were two, the judge and the public prosecutor two more, and the administrators of Shay's estate in America the remainder.

When Shay disappeared from Baltimore, after betraying signs of a complete mental break-down, my services were requisitioned by his friends, who were desirous of having him brought back and placed under the care of the best physicians. It was known that Shay had sailed for England, but there all trace of him had been lost. Shay's career had been a romantic one. Beginning as a newsboy, he had made discovery after discovery in engineering and the kindred sciences, whose patents had brought him fame and wealth. It was after his improvement of the turbine, a task at which he labored incessantly for months, that the mental collapse occurred. He went crazy over perpetual motion, produced the most bizarre—and, of course, entirely worthless—machines, declared that his failure to have these taken up was due to a plot, developed homicidal tendencies and, the day before his intended apprehension, sailed for London upon a British ship, thus removing himself from American jurisdiction. Although his whereabouts were unknown, it was obvious that he would be found in close touch with engineering men across the Atlantic, and I had little doubt that I should readily locate him, after which the real task of inducing him to sail for America would begin.

In spite of the facility of my task, I thought it wise to consult Peter Crewe as soon as I reached England. Crewe had assisted me in solving many strange problems such as befell me in my capacity of a hard-worked lawyer. He had the remarkable optical power of permanently remembering every person or thing that he had once seen, so that he was able at a moment's notice to call it to memory exact to the last detail. He claimed to know half the population of New York and London by sight. A stranger seen for a moment on a passing omnibus, the passengers on a ship, those on the platform of a railroad station—he could remember all with exactitude. He had been in London for several weeks when I arrived, and my first task was to call on him and ask his assistance in locating the object of my search.

"Shay?" queried Crewe thoughtfully. "I must have seen his photograph. Oldish man, clean shaven, clear eyes, iron gray hair?"

"No," I replied, laughing. "You're thinking of Edison. Shay is a short, stout man, about five-and-forty, with a straight nose, eyes wrinkled at the corners, a trick of screwing up his forehead when he speaks to you."

"I have seen him twice during the last week," Crewe answered. "I noticed him particularly, because I recognized him as a man whom I once saw entering the engineering exhibition at Madison Square Garden in New York, and wearing his hat awry. I have seen him twice and, curiously enough, each time in the same place and at the same time. It was in the Earl's Court road at eight in the morning, and he was walking briskly in the direction of Kensington. I have been in the habit of passing through that region at an early hour on my way to my brother's office, and the coincidence of this double meeting impressed me greatly."

"Then how can we find him?"

"Why, let us be in the same spot tomorrow at the same hour, and I should say that we should run an excellent chance," Crewe answered with his brusque common sense.

We followed Crewe's suggestion, but, though we perambulated the Earl's Court road for several mornings in succession, we did not encounter Shay.

"Have you been to the engineering papers and the big firms?" Crewe asked.

"No. I want to avoid doing so if possible," I said. "I do not want the facts of my mission to become known."

"Unless we meet the man face to face I hardly think we are likely to find him," Crewe replied. "There are seven million people in the metropolitan district of London, Langton."

It did, indeed, seem to be a case in which Crewe's optical powers would prove unavailable. We walked slowly back past the entrance to Earl's Court exhibition, discussing the matter. All at once a placard caught my eye. It stated that on the following night the great industrial exhibition would be opened, in which engines and engine tools would have a prominent display. I caught Crewe by the arm.

"We have him!" I exclaimed, exultantly. "He will be there for certain."

Crewe agreed with me and, highly elated, we retraced our steps homeward.

On the next evening we joined the crowds at the exhibition entrance and were shortly admitted. We passed through the spacious grounds, where scenic railways, "loop-the-loop" and "shoot the chutes" arrangements vied with the booths of fortune tellers and those sideshows dear to the exhibition crowds, and entered the machinery hall. The first person who caught my eye was Shay. He was standing, gazing intently at the numerous mechanical inventions, but he seemed to sense my presence and, turning round, came toward me with outstretched hand.

"Glad to see you in London, Langton," he said, cordially. I introduced him to Crewe, and we passed the usual platitudes concerning the weather and England's value as a holiday resort. His conversation certainly seemed rational enough. It was not until we spoke of machinery that Shay's aberration became manifest.

"What brings you to London, Langton?" he asked. "Holiday-making?"

"A little matter of business," I answered evasively. "And you?"

Shay's manner changed. His face became contorted, his excitement was intense.

"To gain the recognition that I am denied by jealous competitors in America," he cried. "Langton, I have made the greatest discovery of the century—perpetual motion. I have invented a machine that will harness the sun's heat and provide the earth with a substitute for coal, that will supply unlimited power and abolish half the electrical mechanism of the day. And why will no one listen to me, either here or in my own country? Because the interests are allied in a dastardly plot to crush me," he shouted. "Because they prefer their present wealth to benefiting the human race. Half the water companies would go bankrupt, Langton, for I can draw rain from the clouds, I can bring fire out of the earth—I can work miracles with my machine."

"How is it made?" asked Crewe.

Shay's face became instantly composed. He looked at him in a cunning manner.

"I'm not so easy as that," he said with a jeer. "But I will tell you the principle of the secret. It is a combination of centrifugal and centripetal power. I am perfecting a few investigations," he went on, smiling inscrutably, "which will bring the mechanism to its highest point of utility. And then, if the world scorns me, I will give some practical demonstrations that will never be forgotten."

"Shay," I interposed, "I have a message for you from your brother which he asked me to deliver if I should come across you. You sent him no address. He wants you to try and get back next month to take a contract for equipping his factory. He says that your presence would be necessary—"

Shay squared his shoulders, threw back his head and burst into a roar of malignant laughter.

"So they sent you after me, Langton," he guffawed. "You must think me easy. You want to get me back," he continued, catching me by the coat lapel, "to put me in a lunatic asylum. That is the last move of the interests, and my brother, my poor brother, whom they have corrupted with their filthy gold. Langton, you cannot extradite a man for lunacy. If I were as raving as you you couldn't touch me when the British flag protects me. Get out!" he concluded, with singular violence. "I'll have no more to say to you."

"My dear Mr. Shay—" I protested, feeling uncommonly foolish.

"Get out!" he roared. "You and your friend. If I set eyes on either of you again I'll fix you. I'll mash you small, I'll break every bone in your bodies and I'll deposit them in the middle of the Earl's Court road of the consistency of a plum pudding."

"Well, Langton, the next move is up to you," said Crewe, laughing, as we strolled away. "He's an uncommonly intelligent madman, and the prospect is that he'll land in some British asylum instead of running into the net you so patently exposed for him."

The chances of fulfilling my mission did look small to me. I went to bed very dejected and awoke still more so. Opening my morning paper I saw a three-column headline in black letters. In England that means more than in America.

The story gave the details of a murder. The body of an elderly man had been found, every bone broken to pieces. Even a fall from a roof top could not have effected that terrific destruction, said the account, for the head was driven right into the ground. The only possible explanation was that the victim had fallen several thousand feet from a balloon.

But what horrified me was this: The body had been found five hundred yards from Earl's Court Exhibition, and in the middle of the Earl's Court Road. The thought of Shay rushed into my mind. I hurried round to Crewe.

"I think the balloon explanation the only possible one," he said, when I had unfolded my fears. "You are overwrought, Langton. Put Shay out of your mind; his words were the ravings of a madman."

But the next day another similar death was chronicled. The body of a man had been found wedged into the wall of an empty house in Bromley street, about the same distance from Earl's Court grounds, but in an opposite directionu. It had been flung with such terrific violence that it had passed through six inches of bricks and mortar and lodged in the front of the house. The human form was barely recognizable.

This time Crewe smiled no longer.

"One can but fall vertically from a balloon," he mused. "This man must have been shot from a twelve-inch gun. Langton, I thing I'll look for your friend Shay again. But this time we'll avoid his recognition."

That night, accordingly, we went into the Earl's Court grounds. We loitered in the vicinity of the machinery exhibition, but there was no trace of Shay. After a while we strolled through the gardens, listened to the bands and inspected a number of sideshows from the outside. Suddenly I felt Crewe pinch my arm.

We were passing the "Aerial Ride." Everybody, probably, has ridden in this contrivance at some time or other. One gets into a boat, suspended, with a number of other boats, from a central pole by long stays of steel. A mechanism underground sets the boats revolving through the air. As they swing further and further out they tilt inward, until one rides at a dizzy pace almost upon his side. If the machine were not operating one would fall to the ground below, but the force of centrifugal motion keeps one in the boat as water stays in a bucket whirled round the head. We were passing this contrivance, I say, when, looking up in response to Crewe's pinch, I saw that the operator was Shay.

I knew him, though he wore a mechanic's cloth cap and a workman's clothes. More than that, he knew me. I saw an expression of unconquerable hate pass over his features and, fairly frightened, hurried away.

I hurried away with Crewe and, at a newspaper kiosk, saw the familiar black headlines on an evening paper. I purchased one. It was the usual story. A third body had been found, three hundred yards from the exhibition grounds, upon a roof top. It had knocked down three chimneys and torn off a cornice and had doubtless been thrown there during the preceding night.

Crewe was very thoughtful when we sat together in my rooms that night.

"It can't be due to Shay," he cried. "That story of his about an irresistible power is absurd. And yet, Langton—what does it mean? I cannot fathom it."

His glance fell upon my bookshelf and he rose to his feet.

"I see you have an enlarged map of London—an ordnance survey, I believe," he said. "I saw it yesterday as we were passing out of the door. Yes, here it is. Let us investigate."

He spread the great sheets on the table, turning them until he reached that of the Earl's Court region. Every house and street was accurately depicted upon this monumental record of patient industry.

"The first body was found here," he said, piercing the paper with a pin. "And the second in the Bromley Road—here. The third on the roof of 55 Quantock street—here. Now we have three-fourths of a circle if we join these pin-holes by a faint line. Upon the fourth side——"

He ceased, for through the open window we heard a newsboy shouting in the street.

"Another body found," he cried. "'Orrible discovery in Preston Road. All the details."

We raced downstairs and bought a copy. Another corpse had been located in a branch of a tree in Preston Road. Crewe hurried back to the map and pricked the spot.

"I have it," he shouted. "Four points on a circumference. Find the center. Langton, I am going to spoil your map."

He connected the points and, using his thumb and finger as a pair of compasses, completed the circle with his finger nail, tracing the nail marks on the paper with a pencil afterward. Then he pointed the center and I sprang to my feet, choking.

The center of the circle was the bandstand in the Earl's Court grounds. And the bandstand was not twenty yards from the "Aerial Ride."

"What does it mean?" I cried.

"Take your hat, take your hat, Langton," said Crewe impatiently. "We'll find out before morning. You know the entrance to the Exhibition which leads past the chutes to the bandstand?"

"No. I thought there was none."

"I mean the low wall that one can vault over," said Crewe impatiently. "The gap left by the workmen who are repairing the wall. O, Langton, why the devil can't you use your eyes? We passed it yesterday on that omnibus. Never mind. Listen! The Exhibition closes at eleven. We vault that wall at 11:30, when all the people have left. We hide in that cluster of trees—you didn't see them, those Japanese laurel shrubs?—well, take my word for it, they are there and we hide in them till midnight, when everybody has gone home. Why not wait till midnight before vaulting the wall? My good Langton, at midnight the people leave the restaurant opposite, since the law forbids them to purchase drinks after that hour. No I can understand you didn't notice the restaurant."

I glanced at the clock as I put on my hat. It was half past ten. There was just time to reach our objective comfortably, but none to spare. We descended the stairs, went into the street and took a motor omnibus for Earl's Court, where we got down.

To cross the wall was simple and we were soon ensconced in the clump of laurel shrubs. Earl's Court was empty of its throngs, and the proprietors of the booths and amusement shows were wending their tired way homeward. After ten minutes more we remained practically the sole inmates of the gardens.

"Langton," said Crewe, "we've got to find what is going to occur at that Aerial Ride tonight. I want you to wait here for me while I go forward and investigate whether or not our masquerading engineer has closed up his property and left. If I need you I shall blow my police whistle. Wait half an hour; then come cautiously in search of me."

I had no watch and the minutes passed like hours. Once or twice, shivering there alone in the darkness, I fancied I heard faint calls from the direction of the bandstand. But the whistle did not blow. At last, wearied of my delay, and with cramped limbs that demanded stretching, I set off toward our objective. I passed the chutes and the bandstand. The place seemed wholly deserted; not even a watchman was to be seen anywhere. As I drew toward the Aerial Ride I noticed a faint glow from the basement in which the mechanism was located. Over my head the boats hung idly and emptily against the sky. Then . . .

An arm was round my throat, compressing it so that I could utter no sound. My head was forced back till the vertebrae felt on the point of breaking; and I was staring into the malignant eyes of Shay.

He was quite mad, furiously and incoherently mad, and, as he held me in his powerful grip, he babbled out his triumph.

"I've got your friend," he cried. "But you'll come first and he'll wait in the engine house. I'll mash you, you sneaking lawyer. I'll smash you, I'll crash you into a plum pudding and lay you down in Earl's Court Road. I've proved it," he went on, gesticulating wildly with one hand but never releasing his strangle hold. "One more, two more bodies found tomorrow and all London will go crazy over my instrument. You don't want to die, Langton? Why, you will be a martyr to science, you will prove the truth of what I told the world, you will assist me to overcome the interests who have fought down my invention for the benefit of the human race. Come along, come along, come joyfully, Langton. I am going to explain it to you before you go through the air."

I was as helpless as an infant in his clasp. Still throttling me, he dragged me up the flight of wooden steps that led to the Aerial Ride and deposited me in one of the motionless boats that swung round a wooden platform. Then, gibbering like a madman and uttering meaningless cries, he gagged me and began binding my arms and legs with a coil of new cord.

"You know the principle of this flight," he said in calmer tones. "You know how the centrifugal force keeps the boats out from the center of the pole and keeps you in that boat. O, what a ride you'll have! We never send our patrons at a speed greater than twenty miles an hour, but my perfected engine will work up to one hundred and twenty. Langton, you'll go whizzing round and round at the speed of an express train, and you'll be horizontal with the ground and the boat will go sailing upon her side—and yet you won't fall out because of the centrifugal power."

He gave one last twist to the cords that bound me and glared into my eyes.

"But suppose I suddenly shut off the engine? What then?" he asked. A smile flickered across his face. "I'll tell you, Langton," he said. "What happens when you whirl the pail of water round and round your head and suddenly stop? What happens to the water? Does it stay in the pail? Or does it go through the air? Langton, you're going through the air. The sudden cessation of the centrifugal force, converted into energy, will throw you just about as hard as a cannon ball.

"You may land in the Earl's Court Road or you may land in the Preston Road or in Bromley street. I can't promise for certain, but my aim is improving, and I can assure you of four hundred yards' clean traveling over the rooftops." He ceased and broke into revilings. He struck me several times, kicked me with his heels, and, in his uncontrollable rage seemed on the point of murdering me. Then, tearing himself away with a shout of final defiance, he left me.

I heard the mechanism begin whirring in the engine house and felt the boat begin to move. It glided gently at first, but soon its motion was accelerated. Now I was flying high in the air over the grounds; faster and faster I flew, till the trees, the buildings and the night shadows were nothing but a blur under me. The speed was inconceivable! It was as though I were lashed to the engine of some train which spun on its circular course at about twice the speed of the Chicago flyer. My brain reeled, my senses were deserting me; terror, even, fled from my benumbed consciousness and I waited calmly for that supreme moment when the power suddenly arrested, I should be sent flying out of the boat and through the air, over the revolving housetops. Each moment seemed an eternity. Would that culmination never arrive? And even as I wondered I felt a shock that jarred each nerve in me; a blinding light, an awful sound in my ears and I lost consciousness.

* * * * *

When I opened my eyes I was still in the boat. But my bonds were unfastened and Crewe was bending over me, rubbing my chafed and tingling limbs. My head swam dizzily.

"It's all right, Langton," he said cheerily. "The watchmen have him under guard in the engine house."

I stared at Crewe, hardly yet conscious of my surroundings, memory slowly filtering back through her accustomed courses.

"What happened to you?" I muttered, striving to recall the occurrences of that period after Crewe's departure.

Crewe sat by me in the boat and rubbed by legs and arms briskly.

"Why, Langton, I must confess that the maniac outwitted me. He came on me from behind as silently as a cat and choked me into insensibility. When I opened my eyes I found myself bound in the engine house. I knew exactly what sort of devilry he was up to, and I surmised that you would be trapped as easily as I. Presently he came back; he was so intent on your destruction that he did not seem to notice me, but from his incoherent mumbling I learned that he had you fastened in one of the boats. He threw on the lever which starts the mechanism and, as the machinery began to work and the speed accelerated, he stood there, rubbing his hands and chuckling, with me bound hand and foot not ten paces away, immediately behind a dynamo.

"From where I lay I saw the speed indicator creep up from nothing toward the century mark. I understood that, when it reach 120, the maximum, the fiend would throw the lever back and send you flying into perdition. I strove to free myself. I got one arm loose, but that was all. I could not stir. But I saw an iron bolt lying not five feet from me and somehow—I can't imagine how—I managed to reach it. Just them the end came. I saw the indicator needle reach the end of the dial. Shay flung back the lever with a shriek of joy, and then, maddened by the thought that your life had been sacrificed, I managed to catch his ankle as he leaped back and brought him to the ground, when I stunned him with the bolt. I found a penknife in his pocket, cut my bonds, and summoned the night watchmen by my cries. But I dared not hope to find you still in the boat."

"But why am I in the boat?" I cried. "Why did I not go flying through the air when he stopped the machinery?"

"Why," said Crewe, smiling faintly, "you owe your life to a most providential oversight on the part of our maniac. In his half-witted fury, instead of merely strapping your arms to your sides, he passed the cords several times around the iron stay what holds the boat in position."

A smile flickered across his face

The Ancient Oracles.

Herodotus mentions between seventy and eighty oracles of one sort and another. There is no reason for thinking that the people who patronized the oracles had other than the liveliest faith in them, else why should they have gone to them, sometimes at great trouble and expense to themselves? The two great oracles were those at Delphi and Dodona, though there were several others that stood well with the people. The predictions were, of course, nothing but predictions, since it is now generally understood that the promoters of those famous institutions were only ordinary human beings like those who patronized them. The deliverance of the oracles belong to one of two classes, first, those founded on secret information, and, secondly, those in which the oracle had absolutely no ideas on the subject and took refuge in sheer vagueness. It was the faith of the people rather than the infallibility of the oracles that kept them up so long.

The Frog That Would Go a-Flying.

Since flying fish and flying squirrels exist, it is not surprising to be told that there are also in the world flying frogs. All these animals have instinctively made use of the fundamental principle of the aeroplane, the perfecting of which is beginning to impart the power of flight to man himself. It is in Java that the flying frog (Polypedates reinwardtii) is found, and Professor Siedlecki, of the University of Cracow, describes it as being of a magnificent clear green color, with white belly, while the membranes betwen its fingers, which enable it to glide on the air, are orange yellow. But it changes color like the chameleon. It inhabits trees and bushes and is active only at night, living on insects. When disturbed it distends its aeroplanes and launches itself a considerable distance through the air.—Youth's Companion.

Merely Uncomfortable.

A London doctor who makes a specialty of hygienic treatment, Dr. Olsen, gave a lecture the other day on women's fashions. Replying to questions, Dr Olsen said he favored loose flowing dresses hanging from the shoulders; while the harem skirt he described as being neither beautiful nor desirable. To a young woman who asked what he had to say upon the subject of men's dress, especially "shirts that looked like boards," the doctor said they were merely uncomfortable, and not nearly so harmful as stays and waistbands.

Cheapers Steel Production.

A German inventor has discovered a new process for making steel which is said to be equal in every point to crucible steel, although made without cricibles, and which is becoming a competitor of electrosteel because, while of equal standard in quality, its cost of production is supposed to be only one-tenth that of electro steel.

Speak Only on Invitation.

In the heavily cushioned seats of a train speeding through Massachusetts sat Josiah White and his wife. It was the first time either had been outside the limits of St. Lawrence county, to say nothing of riding in such luxury, with new and ever-changing scenery around them. As the train neared Boston Josiah nudged his wife.

"Abbie," said he, close to her ear, "don't say a word to me and I won't to you while we're goin' through this city. It ain't polite, unless ye're invited."

"What!"

"Yes. This is Boston, th' place we've heerd so much on as bein' th' city o' th' cultured, and I just overheerd one o' them distinguished-lookin' gentlemen in the seat ahead tell th' other he wuz goin' to stop off here because he has been invited to speak here tonight."—Judge.

First American-Made Cannon.

That the first cannon made in America may be brought to Waynesboro and used as a marker for the grave of John Bournes, or Burns, its maker, a movement has been set on foot by Rev. Cyrus Cort, president of the Enoch Brown Monument association, to locate the ancient weapon and enlist the aid of the British consul at Pittsburg, in an effort to get possession of it. The cannon was taken into the revolutionary war by Burns, who was retained in the service of the continental army to repair muskets, etc. It was captured by the British at Brandywine, and tradition says it was taken to London and placed in the tower.—Philadelphia Record.

Wouldn't Take a Chance.

A firm believer in the power of auto-suggestion was laboring with a boy who had eaten too much plum pudding.

"Now, sonnie," he began for the fortieth time, "just look at me and pay strict attention. Your stomach aches now, doubtless, but if you would stop crying and say to it sternly, 'Stomach, there is no pain in you,' it—"

"It'll nearly kill me," cried the unregenerate sinner, "just to tell me that I lied!"

END OF A LONG LEGAL FIGHT AGAINST THE MOVING PICTURES

Klaw & Erlanger have won their case against the moving picture makers. This decision, which prohibits film makers from making pictures of any copyrighted play or book, is the first theatrical litigation which has been passed upon by the United States Supreme Court. The decision is a very sweeping one, far-reaching in its effects.

Klaw & Erlanger's production of "Ben-Hur" is now in its thirteenth season, playing the Boston Theatre, Boston. It goes into the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York City, next month, and will then go to the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, London, England.

A history of the case is an interesting commentary on the rapid and modern development of the American stage.

The rapid growth and success of moving picture exhibitions drained the ingenuity of the film manufacturers for new pictures and entertainments, and in 1908 it was found that the film producers entered the field of dramatic plays. They had been advised by their attorneys that the copyright statute did not cover moving picture exhibitions.

The first statute in the United States that protected dramatic performances was passed in 1856. Prior to that, the statute only protected the owners of books or plays in the exclusive right to multiply copies, but did not cover stage performances.

IN THE LONG AGO

When Congress passed the law to protect dramatic performances, moving pictures were not in existence, and therefore, of course, that form of exhibition was not in the mind of the framers of the law. The moving picture proprietors and film manufacturers received much encouragement in their determination to produce dramatic plays by the decisions of the courts that the use of the phonograph or pianola was not violative of the rights of the composers of the music. Therefore, in 1908, the country was being flooded with moving picture exhibitions of protected plays. Klaw & Erlanger then concluded that something must be done to protect playproducers and legitimate theatrical managers, if plays were to be preserved, from this wholesale raid made upon dramatic property.

The general opinion was that there could be no protection until Congress was induced to amend the copyright law. As Congress is slow to make any radical changes in that law, Klaw & Erlanger determined that their only remedy was in the courts. They conferred with their counsel, David Gerber, who advised that their remedy was to proceed upon the theory that in order to prepare the moving picture film, it is necessary to write a scenario of the play, which will tell the story originated by the author, and then give a performance, with a company of actors, properly costumed, before a rapid-fire or high-speed camera, and from the negative films then produce positive films, from which, with the aid of a projecting machine used in moving picture theatres, the performance given before the high speed camera is reproduced upon the canvas. Mr. Gerber advised that this, in his opinion, was a representation of the play, which was protected by copyright statute, and if the story was taken from a novel, he held that it amounted to a dramatization, which was also protected by the statute.

AN ACTION BEGUN

To bring that view before the court for determination, a suit was filed in 1908, in the United States Circuit Court, against the Kalem Company, which had manufactured films of "Ben-Hur." When that suit was brought over two thousand performances of "Ben-Hur" had been given in moving picture theatres throughout the country, which were advertised as "Ben-Hur, adapted from the famous novel of Gen. Lew Wallace."

The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, where the moving picture proprietors and film manufacturers, recognizing the vast amount involved in the principle to be decided, retained former Attorney-General of the United States, John W. Griggs, to make the argument.

Mr. Gerber, in his argument before the Supreme Court, had to admit that the views which he presented had never before been passed upon in any country by any court, although moving picture theatres were scattered, in great profusion, practically all over the globe.

A PECULIAR SITUATION

It was also the fact that the courts had refused to protect musical composers against infringement by phonograph and pianola manufacturers, but, in the latter instance, the case was presented upon the theory that the manufacturers of phonograph cylinders and pianola rolls had "copied" the work of the musical composer, and all the courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, had decided that there was no relief, because a phonograph cylinder or the cut music roll used in pianolas could not be said to be "copy" of the staff notations of the composer of the music.

Klaw & Erlanger's suit did not proceed upon the theory that film manufacturers had "copied" the play, but that the performance before the high-speed camera, and its reproduction in a theatre, was a "public representation" of the play, within the meaning of the statute.

The court held that, although the statute was passed in 1856, when moving pictures were not in vogue, still it was intended to protect an author in his exclusive right of public representation, and it mattered not what methods were adopted to give that representation, whether it was by means of a company of actors, delivering the lines, or that of a company of actors giving a performance before a camera, and then reproducing it before an audience, with the aid of a projecting machine and a positive film. So long as the story is told, which was originated by the author, it is a violation of his rights, whether it is told in dialogue or pantomime, with living actors, or in the methods used in moving picture theatres.

The Supreme Court also held that it was not necessary to prosecute each theatre that gave the performance, but that the action would lie against the manufacturer of the film, although he did not give the performance, or cause it to be given, but only sold the film as an article of commerce in the open market. By creating the film he was a contributing infringer of the theatre where the film was eventually used.

THE DECISION

The result of the decision is that every proprietor of a moving picture theatre, as well as the manufacturers of the film, become liable under the statute for one hundred dollars for the first, and fifty dollars for every subsequent performance given, and as these exhibitions are given as often as three to five times a day, the liability will run up to one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty dollars a day.

Suit is now pending by Klaw & Erlanger against the Kalem Company for $25,000 for 500 performances which were given of "Ben-Hur" by means of the Kalem films.

If the decision had been in favour of the moving picture theatres, the result would have been that if a play was produced, and was a failure, all the loss would be borne by the manager making the production; but if it was a success, then, after he had extensively advertised his play so as to become well known to theatregoers, the film manufacturers would take the play, which could then be produced in the moving picture theatres, under the same title, and he advertised as the great New York or metropolitan success which the paly may have achieved.

It will readily be seen that it would have meant hundreds of thousands of dollars to the film manufacturers and moving picture theatres, and by this decision, not only theatre managers and play producers, but owners of books, novels and stories, are protected against lawless invasion and appropriation of their property.

Sore Chest Croup

You often have pains in the muscles, in the side, the back, the neck, or chest. If the inflammation is severe the pain will be intense.

Nothing so quickly cures local inflammation, so thoroughly drives out pain, as "Nerviline," which is without an equal for penetrating, soothing, pain-relieving power.

Nerviline simply can't fail to cure, because it's a perfect antidote for all the pains and aches that invade the family.

Nerviline

"For ten years we have used Polson's Nerviline in our home," writes Mrs. M. E. Graves of Freeport. "For hard, croupy colds there is nothing better. In case of a chill, sudden cold, or neuralgia, Nerviline cures before the trouble gets serious. I have used Nerviline for chronic rheumatism and lame back and find it a wonderful remedy."

All dealers sell Nerviline in large 25c bottles. Get it to-day.

TYPHOID FEVER

From Farm and Dairy.

Typhoid fever is more prevalent in rural Ontario than in our cities. This condition of affairs, Dr. W. T. Connell, of Queen's University, attributes to the poor water supply of country sections. In an address before the Women's Institute Convention in Toronto recently he said:

"Out of one thousand samples of well water of Eastern Ontario I found two-thirds of them to be polluted, and in one village eighty per cent of the wells were polluted. In Eastern Ontario nearly all the wells are surface wells, and this accounts for the bad condition of the water. There is more typhoid in our rural districts than in any of our cities, and the cause of this is that in many cases the wells are too near to the pig pen, the horse stable, or, worse still, the barnyard."

Dr. Connell here gives both the cause and the remedy; the prevalence of typhoid in rural sections was always a mystery until we began to examine our well water. Most of us take it for granted that in our own well is the best water in the country. The first step that we should take towards ensuring the health of ourselves and our families is to have our well water tested for bacterial content, even though we are certain in our own minds that it is safe.

There are certain precautions we should take in any case to ensure a healthy supply of water. The well should be distant from the buildings and, if possible, on higher ground than are the buildings. Wells should be covered to keep out vermin. Even then, it is doubtful if shallow wells supplied by surface water can be considered safe. A good bored well is one of the best investments that we can make.

THIS IS DALTON'S FRENCH DRIP COFFEE POT which your grocer will give you, absolutely FREE, with 2 tins of

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

AT 50c. A TIN

Dalton's French Drip Coffee is the Coffee that is all smiles. It is as different from ordinary Coffee, as pan-dried rolled oats are different from oats fed to horses.

Nature lines the Coffee berry with an inner coating to prevent insects destroying the berry while green. This coat is tough, indigestible and bitter with tannin. Ordinary Coffee contains this tough, bitter shell. The Dalton's method is to roast the Coffee by a special process which retains all the richness and flavor, the exquisite bouquet and aroma.

After the Coffee is ground, another special process removes every particle of hull—leaving only the wholesome, healthful heart of the Coffee berry, rich in gastronomic charm.

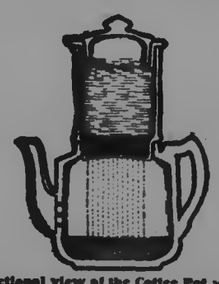
You can drink Dalton's French Drip Coffee for every meal, every day, without fear of Headaches, Indigestion or, any other ill-effects resulting.

But Dalton's French Drip Coffee must be made right to taste right—and that means, without boiling.

The French Drip, or Percolator, Process is the only way to make really good Coffee. This, however, does not mean that you go to the extra expense of buying a costly Percolator.

We have secured sole rights for a French Drip Coffee Pot—one that is reliable, easy to clean, simple in operation. We have tested it for several months and can say that this French Drip Coffee Pot will make Dalton's French Drip Coffee just as it should be made—anyone can use it.

If you like Coffee at all, we know that you will be delighted with Dalton's French Drip Coffee WHEN IT IS PROPERLY PREPARED.



Sectional view of the Coffee Pot we are giving away free.

MILD BLEND COFFEE

To insure this, we give you one of these $1.30 French Drip Coffee Pots, absolutely free, with your first order of a tin each of Dalton's MILD and STRONG Coffee at 50c. a tin.

We limit one Coffee Pot to a family and desire that both kinds of our Coffee be bought. This is to your advantage because you cannot tell in advance which you will prefer for regular use.

The MILD is an exquisite blend with a light, yet full, flavor. The STRONG is for those who wish a heavy, full-bodied Coffee and is especially suited for after-dinner Coffee.

These Coffees are not expensive. At 50c. a tin, they are the cheapest good Coffee on the market, because actual tests show that TWO pounds of Dalton's Coffee will make as many cups as THREE pounds of ordinary Coffee—and there is no comparison in quality or flavor.

Get a tin of each at your grocer's, and he will give you, free, one of the Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pots worth $1.30. If, by any chance, he is unable to fill your order, write us and we will see that you are supplied promptly. Sold in 25c. and 50c. tins.

Big Hall Rally in Committee Rooms To-night. Important Questions Discussed

ACCENT ON THE FRENCH WRONG PLACE TO PUT IT

Mr. Hall Explains the Lop-sided Tendency of Bilingual Schools and Mr. Stratton Names a Few of Whitney's Pie-crust Promises.

Chairman Garbutt presided over an attentive meeting at Zion Hall, Smith township, last night. Mr. R. R. Hall, the Liberal candidate, Mr. Gillespie and the Hon. J. R. Stratton discussed the issues of the campaign, the candidate laying special stress on the deficiencies of the school system, Workman's Compensation Act and demonstration farms.

Chairman Garbutt approved of Mr. Hall as a comparatively young man, born and raised in Peterborough county, who had already won his spurs in the House of Commons.

The chairman was keen on the idea of a demonstration farm for West Peterborough.

"Delegations from this county," he said, "have waited on the Whitney government for some such thing, but the Whitney government hasn't stirred a finger. If we send Mr. Hall to Toronto, we'll surely get action."

New Leader, New Men.

Mr. Gillespie said that the Liberal party in Ontario had lately undergone a reorganization. It had a new leader and a new platform. Its appeal all along the line was to the progressives.

"And Mr. Hall," said Mr. Gillespie, "is the most progressive among the progressives."

"I particularly like his demonstration farm idea," continued Mr. Gillespie. "The farmer is the largest producing part of this province, and it is only fair that his industry should be specially considered. I always thought that the Hon. Nelson Monteith neglected the farming interest. I regard the Hon. James Duff as a worse failure. Under an enterprising Minister of Agriculture, the time will come when every rural riding in Ontario will have its demonstration farm and its demonstrator to drive the object lessons home. Meanwhile, the best thing to do is to send Mr. Hall to the Legislature in Toronto, where he will "start something" if any man ever can."

The "Muddled" School Fiasco.

Mr. R. R. Hall was warmly applauded when he attacked the "muddled school" system.

"It was a very fine theory," said Mr. Hall, "that theory of Normal schools for the training of high class teachers. It was to provide the country school with better teachers, and the teachers were to get better salaries. It was a typical autocratic Whitney theory at that. He liked it, because it cost more money all round.

"In practice," said Mr. Hall, "this expensive theory gave the most wretched results. It deprived the farmer's or the workingman's son and daughter of the chance to get a competent teacher's training at small cost and set up instead of the cheap, easily accessible Model schools, the comparatively expensive Normal school, which few could afford. The consequence is, you have education for the few. The teachers may be higher grade, but being higher grade they go to the places where salaries are higher—that is to say, to the cities and to the far Northwest—and leave the Ontario country school to get along with uncertificated teachers. The Whitney Government made the usual supercilious Tory mistake of regarding anything cheap as not worth while. They see their mistake now in the unmanned schools of Ontario, twenty per cent. of them in the hands of unqualified teachers, and they would sneak Model schools back on the sly if they only could."

The Accent on the French.

The audience showed a lively interest in Mr. Hall's exhibit of French-English readers, authorized by the Education Department of Ontario.

"If the three hundred schools where these readers are used are not bilingual schools, what are they?" asked Mr. Hall.

"But how," asked Citizen Milburn, "are the French children of Ontario to learn English if they are not taught in French?"

"That is a fair question," replied Mr. Hall. "It bring me to a definition of a bilingual school which I have used before. A bilingual school is a school in which both languages are supposed to be used, but only one language is taught."

"You will notice," said Mr. Hall, that I say "supposed to be used." That is the very heart of the grievance. Two languages are not used in the bilingual schools. The English language is not taught. If any language is taught, it is the French. As the Whitney bilingual school works out in practice the accent is all on the French. English is utterly neglected. This is what Bishop Fallon complained of."

"It is my contention," continued Mr. Hall, "that the unfortunate French children in these bilingual schools, where the most elementary subjects are taught in the most unsatisfactory and incompetent manner are not getting a fair chance in the struggle for existence when they are not taught English, the language of Ontario, of Canada, of the British Empire, and of business the world over. The teaching, poor as it is, is all in French. The English is a mere pretence. The bilingual school as it exists to-day, is a vicious, denationalizing institution.

"No one," explained Mr. Hall, "wants to deprive anybody of their mother tongue. Let the French learn French, and the Germans learn German and the Yiddishers learn Yiddish where such things are usually learnt—at their mother's knee—but don't let us have separate French, German and Yiddish schools to teach them. I stand on my platform that every child in Ontario, including the 2,000 French children who are born every year in this province, has a right to a thorough elementary education and a practical working knowledge of English, the language of his native country."

The Pigeon Creek Bridge.

Mr. Hall alluded to the disgraceful state of disrepair in which the Pigeon Creek bridge was kept, owing to the apathy of the Whitney Government.

"This bridge," said Mr. Hall, "is declared dangerous and impassable even in the summer time. It is an important bridge connecting the trade of Victoria county with the city of Peterborough and is a great convenience to the residents of Verulam, Ennismore and Smith and the travelling public generally. I would make it a special point to see that upon this leading road, the main trade artery between Bobcaygeon and Peterborough, that the provincial government contribute a substantial amount to keep Chemong Bridge and Pigeon Creek bridge in proper and safe repair. This is in line with the policy which I advocate to have the Provincial government substantially aid in keeping all leading roads throughout the province in perfect condition for travel."

Mr. Stratton's Advice.

Hon. J. R. Stratton, who was warmly applauded, told the farmers some of the things that had happened to them since reciprocity was defeated.

"You made a mistake then," said Mr. Stratton. "Don't make a mistake now. Don't always vote for your party. Vote for your own interests. Vote for Mr. Hall and send a representative to the Legislature who will represent Mr. Hall's is the most reasonable and, at the same time, the most advanced political platform that any Liberal running in Ontario has put forward."

"You want a man like Mr. Hall in the Legislature," continued Mr. Stratton, "a man who can inquire and cross examine and sift evidence. Why, just after the Ross government was defeated a quarter of a million dollars worth of stuff, manufactured goods and raw materials, disappeared from the Central Prison. It was common knowledge at the time, but there was nobody in the new Legislature to check the thing up. Mr. Hall would be a good man to go after cases like that.

Some Pie Crust Promises.

"It should make people laugh on the wrong side of their face," said Mr. Stratton, "to think of Whitney's pie crust promises of seven years ago. Retrenchment. How has he retrenched? By raising the expenditure from four millions to eight. Taking the license system out of politics. Well, you know just how much taking out there has been. You know how much local option is a dead letter or not."

"You don't want a Conservative member at Ottawa and a Conservative member at Toronto," concluded Mr. Stratton. "If you do that, the Conservatives will say, "We've got West Peterborough anyway," and you won't get any sort of consideration. You ought to divide your favours and keep them on the anxious seat."

The meeting closed with cheers for the king and the candidate.

Gilbert Horton Apprehended by High County Constable Cochrane on Charge of Stealing $115

WAS REMANDED

Gilbert Horton, cheese and butter maker for the Lakefield Dairy Co., was arrested just outside the city limits yesterday by High County Constable Cochrane, on two charges, one of stealing $115 from the Company, and one of stealing a quantity of butter from the Company. He was arraigned before Magistrate Edmison yesterday afternoon, and was remanded until to-day, when he was again remanded until next week, to prepare for trial. He pleaded not guilty. The authorities have been informed that he has a wife and five children, the latter being under the age of 14 years, and has very little provision for them. They were informed that he had been drinking lately, and when arrested he had a bottle of liquor with him.

MARQUIS DROWNED

Special to The Examiner:

DUBLIN, DEC. 2.—Marquis Waterford, the most prominent of the Irish nobility, was found drowned in the river Clodagh, which flows through his estate in County Carrachmore. He went to look at his kennels last night alone, and it is thought he fell, accidentally, into the river, which was badly swollen.

NANKING IS CAPTURED

NANKIN, CHINA, DEC. 3.—The Revolutionary forces marched into this city and took possession without much fighting, this morning, after a siege of some weeks.

It is not known whether or not General Chang, Federal leader, has escaped or was beheaded. It was thought than at agreement was reached that surrender be made on condition that there shall be no execution. Nanking is one of the most important cities in China.

CHRISTMAS STAMPS AND CALENDARS TO ASSIST THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Will be Put on Sale on Tuesday Next in Order to Raise Funds to Take Up the Tuberculosis Fight

A DESERVING OBJECT

Are you going to help in the fight against tuberculosis in Peterborough?

The foregoing question is addressed to each individual citizen, and the Peterborough Health Association, in the next three weeks, will afford everyone a splendid opportunity to do something for this work. It is the intention of the Association, in the near future, to employ a district nurse, who will visit homes, where her services are required, advising as to the care and treatment of the disease. In order to carry out this enterprise, considerable funds will be required, and for this purpose, from now until Christmas the Association is placing on sale Christmas stamps and calendars. The stamps are similar to those that are sold annually in aid of the Muskoka Free Hospital. The calendars are attractively got up in pretty colour designs, and inscribed with appropriate mottos, and verses that everyone should heed. They sell at twenty-five cents, and are most suitable, as well as useful Christmas remembrances. The stamps are to be one cent each.

The druggists of the city have very kindly given permission to have these sold in their stores, and commencing Tuesday next, until the close of the holiday season, these can be obtained at the above places. The object is a worthy one, and it is hoped that the people of Peterborough will respond liberally, giving aid to the local movement by purchasing freely of the stamps and calendars. Everyone can help, if only by taking a few stamps, and thus encouraging the efforts of the Association in a noble cause. Stamps and calendars will be on sale Tuesday morning at the drug stores.

Hear Hon. Mackenzie King Voice The Voice Of Labour

Don't miss hearing Mackenzie King, at the Opera House next Thursday night, December 7th. He was Minister of Labour in the late Laurier Administration. Labour had in him more than a Cabinet Minister. It had an Enthusiast.

Because he is the friend of the workingman and in full sympathy with Mr. R. R. Hall's advanced stand on the Workman's Compensation Act, and the Factory Inspection Act, the former Minister of Labour comes here to speak.

As a workingman, as a friend of popular rights, you can say "hear, hear," to anything Mackenzie King utters.

Mackenzie King's sympathy with the workingman goes back to his college days when he delved into the political economy books, and then and there developed that noble indignation for the under dog which led him to his life work.

His sympathy goes further back than that. It was in the blood. It had to come out. His grandfather was William Lyon Mackenzie, the patriot of 1837, exiled, but afterwards received again with honour as the champion of popular liberty in Ontario. Mackenzie King has the root of the matter in him. The civil liberties which his grandfather suffered poverty and exile to secure, Mackenzie King makes it his duty to follow up and enlarge.

Go and hear Mackenzie King. You will hear an eloquent young man who looks like a boy and talks like John Burns. And after hearing him, vote for R. R. Hall, who stands just where Mackenzie King does on the great question of the workingman's rights.

"Saturday Night" Admits That It Made A Mistake

The Examiner interviewed Mr. H. P. Kennedy to-day regarding the criticism in the Toronto Saturday Night of last week of the proposition of the Independent Real Etate Co. in Edmonton, in which Mr. Kennedy and other Peterborough people are interested.

Mr. Kennedy gave the Examiner a clipping from this week's issue of the Saturday night in which the paper acknowledges their error in the statements made. The correction is as follows:

Mixed Babies Up.

The name Industrial Centre originally utilized by the Independent Real Estate Company of 43 Victoria St., Toronto, in advertising its Edmonton subdivision (this corporation has since assumed the title Industrial Heights), no doubt led the Land Commissioner of the Grand Trunk Pacific to reply to a query from Saturday Night as he did respecting the Independent Company's proposition, and quoted in last weeks' issue, which was in substance that the Grand Trunk Pacific did not intend building a station on "Industrial Centre." This statement is no doubt correct, but the original assumption of the name "Central" the Independent Real Estate Company confounded the latter Company and their Industrial Heights proposition with Industrial Centre, which is one and one-half miles to the north-west.

So it turns out that the G. U. Ryley, Land Commissioner of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and Saturday Night, both unwittingly did the Independent Real Estate Company an injustice. As a matter of fact, the Industrial Heights sub-division already has a railway ticket office on its property and the G.T.P. has promised increased shipping facilities as soon as development warrants.

Two many claimants for one name has its disadvantages, even in the real estate business.

Mr. Borden Says Government Has No Power Over Marriage

Ottawa, November 30. — In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Boivin, in regard to the Ne Temere decree inquired whether the Dominion Government had power to legalize or invalidate any or every marriage solemnized anywhere in Canada.

Premier Borden replied that the question was one of law. The Dominion Government, he proceeded, had no power whatever in such matters. The jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament and the Provincial Legislatures was defined in the British North America Act.

"That's safe," commented Sir Wilfrid, amid renewed laughter.

"Not only safe, but accurate," was Mr. Borden's retort.

NEGATIVE WON

An interesting debate on the subject, "Resolved that the great influx of foreigners into Canada is a detriment, rather than a benfit," took place at the Normal School last night under the auspices of the Literary Society. The affirmative was taken by Miss Waite and Mr. Beatty, while the speakers for the negative were Miss Hineman and Mr. Dewart. The speakers on both sides advanced many telling arguments, and the delivery of all four was favourably commented on. The judges, Miss Jackson, Miss Clarke and Mr. Chisholm, decided that the negative had presented the strongest case, and gave their decision accordingly.

Accident Caused By Coasters

(Lindsay Post.)

Last evening Miss Ethel Graham had a narrow escape from serious injury on Bond street. She was walking along the thoroughfare when a number of young people who were coasting on the sidewalk, ran into her. She was knocked down and badly stunned as a result of the collision.

Two citizens who passed along the street during the evening and who warned the coasters of the risk they were running were informed that they could take the road if they did not like walking on the sidewalk.

The police have issued a warning that coasting on the sidewalks must cease, so a word to the wise is sufficient.

EARLY MORNING FIRE

Spontaneous combustion was directly responsible for the destruction by fire, of the stable at the rear of Dr. McGath's dwelling last night. The fire was first discovered by the doctor, who was in his surgery at the time, and by the time the Fire Department arrived on the scene, the building was enveloped in flames. The doctor's horse, buggy and harness were removed from the stable, but not before the former was badly burned about the head and shoulders.

Two lines of hose were laid, one from McDonnell street and the other from a George street hydrant. The firemen directed their efforts upon the saving of the dwelling, which was in immediate danger of falling a prey to the flames. After about an hour's strenuous work on the part of the brigade, the fire was got under control.

The damage to the building will be in the neighbourhood of $300 and to the contents about $75.

LOS ANGELES IS STUNNED

Confession of the McNamaras Has Amazed Everyone—Prisoners Seem Cheerful To-day

LATEST DEVELOPMENTS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., DEC. 3.—This city is still stunned by the confession that McNamaras deliberately blew up the Times building, causing the death of twenty-one citizens. The latest development was the information, published this morning, in special extras of the local newspapers, that the prisoners' admission of their guilt was brought about by a committee of influential business men, who, realising, as most people did, that the prisoners' defence was absolutely untenable, arranged to secure their confession, and take less severe punishment. "We are not after revenge," said one of the committee to-day. "We realize that taking of more lives by judicial process would not wipe out the awful stain of the Times outrage; we want to demonstrate to the labour movement that we can fight fair and show mercy when there is an opportunity."

The prisoners maintained cheerfulness to-day. They say they are glad the ordeal is so far, over.

NEW YORK, N.Y., DEC. 3.—A despatch says that the Committee of business men, mentioned in Los Angeles represented the "men and religious movements," headed by Rockefeller, Morgan, and other capitalists, and are now making a quiet, but forceful Christian manhood revival through the States.

TORONTO, EC. 2.—"Do we get our money back?" This is the question which many organized labour men in Toronto are asking themselves this morning, for at least ninety per cent. of the men of all labour unions in Toronto, cotributed from 25 cents to $5.00, to the McNamara defence fund. It is not likely that much of it will return to Canada, any way.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI, DEC. 2.—At a meeting of the Central Labour Council of St. Joseph, representing nearly all the labour unions of the city, resolutions were adopted unanimously demanding the death penalty for McNamara. Indignation is at high pitch among union men here on account of the affair.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., DEC. 2. — The McNamara prisoners were guarded by special police last night, the authorities fearing uprisals by the labour organizations here.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

SATURDAY, DEC. 2, 1911

AN INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE.

Mr. David Andrews, of Asphodel, is out in East Peterborough as an independent Conservative candidate. He is opposed to the Whitney government, but claims to be a Conservative still, but is in favour of real reform in government. At the request of a large number of Conservative electors, he has entered the field as an independent candidate and appeals to the support of all independent-minded electors. The Whitney government must be a little less than perfect, when a life-long Conservative comes out in opposition to its candidate.

HE SHOULD RESIGN.

Some of Mr. Burnham's admirers are boasting of his bold stand in bearding the lion in his den, in condemning the Laurier Government for its attitude towards the Ne Temere decree, in the den of lions—his Nationalist colleagues and his Nationalist masters in the Cabinet. They boast too soon. Mr. Burnham is not bold enough to condemn Hon. Mr. Borden, who makes the same statement as Sir Wilfrid, in regard to the Ne Temere decree—that the Government has no power to effectively interfere in the matter. Mr. Burnham was elected as a supporter of Mr. Borden, on the ground that the latter would destroy the Ne Temere decree, and all that belongs to it. Now, he refuses to do it, and Mr. Burnham should, in consistency, resign his seat.

HOW THE REWARDS GO.

Some small-souled patriots complain that Mr. Arthur Hawke was rewarded with a fat post at $10 a day, or $3,000 per year. Why not? Mr. Bourassa, and his three representative Nationalists in the Borden Cabinet, who worked with Mr. Hawke, to elect Mr. Borden, and save the Empire and British connection, have got their reward. They get the posts or honour in the Borden Cabinet, and altogether pull in $25,000 a year, or counting the salary of hole-in-the-British-flag Speaker Blondin, $26,500 a year. Then why grudge a loyal British-Born patriot a paltry three thousand a year? It seems to pay better to be disloyal, as many disappointed voters in Ontario are beginning to see. Did the electors of Ontario give Mr. Borden 60 of a majority in this province of Ontario to have the Government of Canada practically placed in the hands of the British-hating Nationalists?

IT ALL DEPENDS.

Mr. Burnham opposed Laurier because he said the Dominion Government had no power to legalize or validate marriages solemnized in Canada, and now Mr. Borden says the same thing. And Mr. Borden is head of a government, such as Mr. Burnham says the country demanded—"strong enough and willing enough to enforce the laws of the country." It appears, however, that the Borden Government is not "strong enough, nor willing enough" to do what Mr. Burnham demanded from Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But does Mr. Burnham denounce Mr. Borden? No; he gulps down the Ne Temere decree for the moment, any way—and votes for Mr Borden's nominee for the deputy-speakership, Mr. Blondin, the truly loyal French gentleman, who shows his love for the flag by the statement he made—"We had to shoot holes through the flag in 1837, to breathe the air of liberty through." It all depends upon whose ox is gored.

HIS HANDS ARE TIED.

If Ontario be shut out from Hudson Bay, it will be done by Messrs. Roblin and Rogers and Mr. Borden, with Sir James Whitney's connivance. —Hamilton Times.

We would not go so far as to say that the thing was done with the connivance of Sir James Whitney.

In fact, we think that it would have been highly entertaining to have been present when the news reached the Ontario Premier that Hon. Robert Rogers had handed Manitoba what she wanted, with Mr. Borden's consent, and with Hon. Frank Cochrane smilnig and amiable, but wholly failing to see what it meant to Ontario.

Mr. Rogers knew. He is a knowing person. He knew that once the thing was done Sir James would have to fume in secret, not being able to come out and fight his friends at Ottawa the way he would have fought his political opponents had they treated Ontario in the same way. The party think they have Ontario nailed down and can do what they like with her interests.

MR. BURNHAM AND MR. BLONDIN.

Mr. Blondin, the Nationalist, has been elected Deputy-Speaker of the House of Commons to be a running-mate of Hon. Dr. Sproule, to judge the deliberations of a Canadian Parliament in a British Dominion. Mr. Blondin is an outspoken enemy to every thing British, and his election as Deputy Speaker is a surprise, or would be a surprise, if the country did not know how thoroughly Hon. Mr. Borden is under the thumb of Mr. Bourassa, and his Nationalist, French Canadian followers.

Mr. Blondin is the gentleman who qualified to preside over a British Parliament my declaring that "Canada was nothing to England. England did not conquer her to plant the Cross of Christ here, as France did. She did it simply to get trade."

And again this beautiful British sentiment, to show that England is called bad: "England has sown the world with hatred quarrels and won. We have had enough of England and the English."

And this is the man that Mr. Burnham, the candidate champion of British connection, with his denunciation of the "Ne Temere decree," (in which Mr. Blondin is the firm believer)—with the echoes of his words still in the chamber — this same Mr. Blondin is the man Mr. Burnham voted unanimously for as deputy-speaker, one of the highest and most important positions in the gift of Parliament.

IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS.

The Mail and Empire, under glaring headlines, announces that Hon. W. H. Hearst, Minister of Mines and Lands, has prepared an energetic policy of development of New Ontario. This is another example of Sir James being hit in the house of his friends. Here, we have official confirmation of the Tory Toronto Telegram's declaration that Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands in the Whitney cabinet, slept through six years of office, without waking up to the need of development of New Ontario. Now the Telegram can say, "I told you so." Here we have nothing done for the building up of New Ontario for seven years, and it is only now that the Whitney government wakes up to throw out an election life buoy in the form of a "vigorous development policy," warranted brand new, hatched after six years' quiet incubation. But we have no assurance that Sir James will let Mr. Hearst's "skimpy chicken" come out of the coop. Sir James has his own ideas about "the land of the stunted poplar." He says it is not to be settled, built up and developed, because it will bring in no provincial revenue. New Ontario settlers will buy things that pay customs taxes and the revenues will go to the Dominion government. Isn't that the view of a statesman? Settlers will create demands upon the industries, the factories, of old Ontario, and do something even almost as good as paying taxes into the provincial government chest. In Sir James' eyes all the good of population is to pay taxes, and he even won't let the municipalities of Ontario decide themselves what form they shall take.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

If anybody wants to know if Dr. Beattie Nesbitt can "come back" let him ask Attorney-General Foy.

Hon. Mr. Hanna might blend civil out again—in favour of government ownership. But Bourassa is a good lap ahead of him; he not only believes in, but actually rejoices in, government ownership—he owns the Borden government.

Mr. W. F. McLean, M.P. has broken service and prison reform. A gentleman, still an unwilling inmate of Kingston penitentiary, and evidently a good Conservative, applies to the Borden government for a civil service sit. The cheek of him; and he didn't even vote for the flag.

Mr. Hall, in his announcements, advocates demonstration schools in agriculture. But Sir James is ahead of him. He has been talking poultry all through the campaign—trying to fatten Mr. Rowell's skimpy chicken—and by his favourite method, blowing it up, as they say some farmers fatten chickens for Christmas.

As to the harmony of the Whitney Government in the matter of bilingual schools, we have Hon. Dr. Reaume and Hon. Mr. Foy contradicting each other on matters of fact in the matter of bilingual schools, and Premier Whitney taking another view, or, rather executing a straddle between the two—sitting on the fence—boldly.

A gentleman at present an involuntary in Kingston Penitentiary and describing himself as a life-long Tory, has written Mr. Andrew Broder to say that he will soon be at liberty and would like a position in the civil service. Perhaps, suggests the Toronto Star, something in the way of night watchman at the mint would be to his liking.

Conservative journals still insist that there is the most perfect harmony in the Borden Cabinet. If it is true there has been an outrageous surrender of principle on the part of the party of loyalty and a Premier who was given office on pleas directly antagonistic to the ruling element in his cabinet. The surrender has not been made by the anti-British, ultramontane Nationalists.

PERTINENT QUESTION.

Rev. John Coburn, chaplain of the Orange Grand Lodge for Ontario, speaking yesterday in North Toronto, in the interests of Mr. Jos. Oliver, Liberal candidate, called on Sir James Whitney to repudiate the statement of Hon. Dr. Reaume respecting bilingual schools and called upon Sir James to take a stand on the subject. Rev. Mr. Coburn, in reference to Mr. Foy's statement that bilingual schools were illegal, said:

"If it is illegal to teach any other language than English in the schools of this Province, where has he (Mr. Foy) been for the last seven years? Everybody knows that French has been taught and is being taught in the Public and Separate schools of this Province. The Attorney-General was no more energetic in dealing with the bilingual school question than in dealing with a certain bulky bank President with whom we are all familiar."

Liberal Whip Lays The Lash On Borden Choice For Deputy Speaker

The following is a report of the parliamentary incident, or, rather catastrophe, of electing Mr. Blondin, Nationalist, as deputy-speaker of the House of Commons, as running mate for Hon. Dr. Sproule, M.P., ex-Grand Master of the Orange Order:

Mr. Pardee met Premier Borden's nomination of Mr. Blondin with a vigorous arraignment, which kept the Liberal benches in a storm of cheering. On the part of Canadian Liberals, and he believed on the part of loyal Canadians, generally, he objected to the selection of this man, as second Commoner of the country. He charged that the Nationalist nominee of the Government was disloyal to Canada, and had sought by speech and action to stir up sentiment for the purpose of destroying the solidarity of the British Empire. He quoted from the Quebec Chronicle, a Conservative paper, which had denounced the character of the Nationalist campaign, and from L'Evenement, a Nationalist organ, which had reported Mr. Blondin as declaring: "Canada owes nothing to England. England did not conquer her to plant the cross of Christ here, as did France. She did it simply to get trade." Again, reading frm the Hansard debate on the Drummond-Arthabaska bye-election, Mr. Pardee read the charge made by Hon. Mr. Brodeur, and then undenied, that Mr. Blondin at Victoriaville had declared that the only liberties which Canadians enjoyed they snatched from England. England had "sown the world with hatred, quarrels and war." "We have had enough of England," was his final utterance. "We have had enough of England and the English."

Speaker Intervenes.

Mr. Blondin rose and exclaimed that he had said nothing disloyal.

Mr. Pardee retorted, amid Liberal cheering, that the denial was tardy. Mr. Blondin had told the House in the debate in question that he was "not ashamed of what I said, and will repeat it to-morrow, if called on."

Hon. Dr. Beland was present on the occasion in Quebec, and stated that he distinctly heard Mr. Blondin use the words quoted.

Speaker Sproule said that Mr. Blondin's denial must be accepted, under the rules of Parliament. He asked Mr. Pardee to withdraw.

Mr. Pardee thought a belated denial at the present epoch was not entitled to acceptance. "Does he deny that he is a member of the Nationalist party?" the West Lambton man persisted.

"No, I don't," shouted back Mr. Blondin, when Speaker Sproule again interposed that "in view of the denial of the member, his statement must be accepted."

Mr. Pardee said he found himself bound to bow to the ruling of Mr. Speaker. He did so with regret, for he felt very strongly that the man chosen by the Parliament of Canada to be its second Commoner should be a true and patriotic Canadian, a man who would fill the responsible position with dignity and credit to Canada. 'No such appointment as has been suggested by the Prime Minister will meet the approval of true Canadians," he added, amid renewed Liberal cheering.

Major Beattie interpolated that M. Y. McLean, fromer Liberal member for South Huron, had declared in the House that he had no regard for England. "He was defeated at the last election, and I don't think he will ever set foot in this House again," volunteered the Major.

Power For Peterborough Is A Business Not A Party Question

Peterborough is concerned, deply concerned, in the power problem. It has been a problem for several years, and if it is, or seems to be, more acute at present, it is because it has been thrust upon us at this time, and in the midst of the turmoil of a general election.

For this very reason that it demands more serious consideration. The question of power for Peterborough is too serious a one, it involves too great an expenditure of money, too, considerable an increase of taxation, not to be discussed on its merits.

The true friend of the interests of the city is not one who jumps at a political bait for catching votes, and insists on considering the question of power for Peterborough in the light of its political or party effects.

The Hydro-Electric power proposal must be dealt with on its merits, and ten or a dozen days is not sufficient to disclose its merits sufficiently to the point of influencing votes and committing ourselves to its adoption. If it is a good proposal, if it is in the interests of Peterborough, by all means let us adopt it.

But we must be sure that it is the best arrangement that is open to us. Under Mr. Beck the Hydro-Electric Commission has shown some claim to benefitting Western Ontario. But it has taken a long time to get as far east as Peterborough, which, after five or six years of opportunity, it reaches only at the suspicious date of a general election. It is, however, worth inquiry whether there is still a Hydro-Electric Commission. The Commission is to be withdrawn, and its functions transferred to—pigeon-holed in—a Whitney Government department.

What does this mean? It means, judging from the past, that if Mr. Beck is Power Minister in the Whitney Government, he will come under the blight that seems to affect all the departments; of the Attorney-General, the Agricultural Department, the Education Department, and the License Administration Department.

If the Power Commission comes under the Whitney Government as a departmental entity, it may be a cold day for the Hydro-Electric scheme.

The Examiner is falsely accused of being opposed to the Hydro-Electric policy. It is not opposed to it on its merits, it only insists on its being dealt with on its merits, and not as a political expedient.

The Hydro-Electric policy and Hon. Mr. Beck have had no more effective opponent, had to encounter no more deadweight of opposition from the outside, than it and he have had to fight against in the Whitney Government, in which opposing "interests" apparently had for a time more "power" than Mr. Beck and the Hydro-Electric. Sir James Whitney's own organs denounce the action of Sir James Whitney in transferring the Hydro-Electric Commission to the "strangle hold" of a government department.

There is added reason why we should not pledge our votes on the Hydro-Electric proposal in its present misty condition, in the atmosphere of a general election.

Peterborough should have power, and power, at as low a rate as possible, but we want to be sure of our ground—not buy a pig in a poke.

According to the estimate of the Hydro-Electric Commission's engineer, the cost of developing electricity is about $110 per horse power, and as power is to be based on cost, to get 5,000 horse power, the ratepayers of Peterborough would have to reckon on a cost of $500,000 for development as a basis of price.

Now this involves the idea that the power matter is not one that can be settled off-hand in the heat of an election campaign. Two years ago the electors of Peterborough voted by a big majority for a $120,000 water works bylaw, but they at the same time voted down a $15,000 bylaw to develop water power at the water works dam, which would have yielded enough to light the streets and homes of the city, and at a price that would have needed no expense but the cost of a generator to affect it.

Let us consider the present power proposal of the Whitney Government, not in the light of a vote catching expedient for the present elections, but as a business matter.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I AM a young girl who has recently become engaged. My fiance is just splendid and is exceptionally good to me in almost every way. He is very attentive, thoughtful and generous in almost every respect, but he does just one thing I do not quite like. Several times since we became engaged he has been off to the theatre by himself or with other men. Now do you think that this is right? It seems to me that he ought to take me whenever he goes to the theatre. What do you think about it?

So questions one of my young letter friends.

Poor, foolish little girl. Is it that you don't like your ointment perfectly clear and untainted, since you seek so diligently to find a fly in it?

It almost seems to me that must be the trouble.

Now, little girl, suppose you bring out, furbish and put into use some of that quality which engaged people so often keep carefully hidden away; namely, your common sense. In the first place, to take you to the theatre costs your fiance at least twice—probably three or four times what it would cost him to go by himself or with a crowd of men, for whereas he is ashamed to go cheaply by himself, the best in the house is none too good when he takes you.

Therefore, he might feel that he could afford seventy-five cents or a dollar for one when he could not afford three or four dollars for two. There are evenings, presumably, when he does not come to see you. Isn't it natural that he should want something interesting and absorbing to take up his mind and bridge over the cruel separation?

It seems to me that any girl who is discontented and jealous when her fiance goes off with his men friends once in a while for a masculine good time is making a great mistake. He is giving her a proof of the fact that she has drawn the very best kind of man—a man's man, a man who likes the crowd and is liked by them.

The woman who is discontented, instead of delighted at such a proof, is foolish, but she who lets the man ever suspect her discontent and jealously is doubly so.

Remember, my dear, and any of your sisters who may have been piqued at finding their fiances could have a jolly time without them occasionally, remember that in love the tie that binds is always the tie that galls and often the tie that breaks.

Perhaps you folks will think I'm queer, but I simply can't see that complete independence in a pair of lovers is any guarantee for happiness. It seems to me that the twain who have the fullest, completest lives apart will be the two who will be the happiest in union because they will not wear that union out by asking too much of it.

Don't try to crush out as much as you can of his individual, separate life and interests. Be thankful for every one that he has. Sympathize with them and share them as far as he likes to have you, but beyond that leave him free and untrammeled by suspicion or discontent, to enjoy himself as a man in a man's way.

Believe me, if you do you will have your reward in finding that you have a much finer, happier man than one whose interests were hidebound by yours.

Ruth Cameron

THE FAMILY HEARTH

To the young man who has no taste for reading, the evening hours become loaded with temptation. It is tiresome to sit moping by the stove, and he naturally drifts to the street or the card table. There he finds others like himself and vacant hours to while away and thus grow up those habits and associations which soon eventuate in dissipation or lead to crime.

All that the wife can do will not make the home an agreeable one. Neither can a wife be happy with a husband who is addicted to finding fault with his bread and butter. She may try ever so hard to please him, yet when he sits down to meals, she lives in constant fear that some portion of the food will not suit his fastidious taste.

Be polite to your children. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare, to grow glad at your approach, to bound away to do your pleasure before your request is half spoken? Then with all your dignity and authority, mingle politeness. Give it a niche in your household temple. Only then will you have the true secret of sending out into the world really finished gentlemen and ladies.

When we launch our ship on the morning waves of the great sea of life, let us guide them by the light of home, with the helm of the cradle words of our mother. Not until we have left home and are wanderers in the curious strangeness of a strange land, unnoticed, unheeded, lonely and weary, will we know of a truth what a mother is. Then we feel that she is good and we bless her. Never can we repay our mother's kindness. Her withered form and her silvering braids shall be defended till the day cometh when He shall make up His jewels—and then we ween, Heaven will know no kinder, no brighter, no purer angel than she. When the ever shining stars shall wane in the fading of our vision, and the noisy world will grow still in our sleep of death, will we forget her; not till then.

The making of money and saving of money, as distinguished from the miserly love of money which is said to be the root of all evil, should be the aim of all young men who start out in life for themselves. They include habits of industry that lead to contentment and often ward off dissipation, want and future misery. It was not the gathering in of wealth that has sent so many leading men to prison it was the unlawful manner in which they endeavoured to reap their harvest.

If brothers or sisters err, the world says "shun them; thus you will show that you disapprove of the act, making an example of them." Alas! how many examples we have of this mode of teaching crowding the haunts of infamy to-day. Once bright young lives, over whose pure lips and innocent brows mothers watched in all tenderness; but the trembling feet took one false step, and so we thrust them out of our hearts, out of our churches and would even thrust them out of heaven. Is it right, is it just, is it Christlike?

What's the use of getting into a worry and fret over gossip that has been set afloat to our disadvantage by some meddlesome busybody who has more time than character. These things can't possibly injure you, unless indeed, you take notice of them and in combatting them give them character and standing. If what is said about you is true, set yourself right at once; if it is false let it go for what it will fetch. If a bee stings you, would you go to the hive and destroy it? Would not a thousand come upon you? It is wisdom to say little respecting the injuries you have received.

We like to see the glancing, cheerful light through the window of a neighbour of a cold night, or watch them, as evening deepens, gradually creeping from the parlour to the upper stories of the house near us. We like to watch the little children going in and out of the door, to play, or to school. We like to see the white-robed baby dancing up and down at the window in its mother's arms, or the father reading his newspaper there at evening, or any of these cheerful, impromptu home glimpses, which, though we are no Paul Pry, we will assert go to make a pleasant neighbour to those who live for comfort instead of show.

We should strive to make ourselves such members of the household band that our absence is like the loss of sunshine from a summer day. We can do it if we enter into the right spirit of home. The idea seems to exist among us that to be polite to each other in the family circle is foolish and like "putting on airs." We must rid ourselves of this notion and act on the principle that whatever helps to make our intercourse pleasanter with those outside the family circle should be brought into use there.

A cut finger is not benefitted by pulling off the plaster and exposing it to somebody's eye. Charity covereth a multitude of sins. Things thus covered are cured without a scar; but, once published and carried to meddling friends, there is no end to the trouble they may cause. Keep it to yourself. Troubles are transient; and, when a sorrow is healed and passed, what a comfort it is to say "No one ever knew it till it was over."

Every one has to fish for what he gets. Others may possibly bait and take off the prize from the hook and paddle the boat, but the fishing has got to be done by your own hand. Every other means you may try will turn out a failure.

Porcupine Production

Within 60 days it is expected the stamps will have been their long grind in Porcupine and after the machinery is working smoothly the stream of gold bullion will flow into the marts of the world. Before this important era dawns upon us, we anticipate a sharp advance in the stocks of the practically proven gold mines of this district.

The market is now apparently at the bottom and handsome profits will likely accrue to those who act quickly and use calm judgment in their purchases. As we are not tied to any mining company and are not engaged in the promotion business but confine ourselves exclusively as specialists in mining stocks, any advice we give as a guide to investors is absolutely unbiased and as accurate as can be gotten. This service is making money for others, and why not you?

We issue a special Weekly Market Letter which treats exclusively with the physical conditions of the Porcupine and Cobalt properties that are being actively developed. We recommend the immediate purchase of:

"WOMEN BETTER WITHOUT FRANCHISE" DECISION OF CHARLOTTE ST. DEBATERS

Interesting Debate Under the Auspices of Young Men's Bible Class Last Night Won by Affirmative.

A FINE PROGRAMME

"Resolved that women are better as they are, without a franchise," was the subject of a very interesting debate, which was held in the Sunday School room of the Charlotte Street Methodist church last evening, under the Young Men's Bible Class. The negative was cleverly argued by Mr. I. D. Nixon, and Mr. C. C. Moore, while the affirmative was ably defended by Mr. Ellis, Associate Editor of the Farm and Dairy, and Mr. H. M. Gilchrist, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

The judges were Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. I. Couch, and Mr. E. L. Goodwill, who, after thoroughly considering the merits of the case, decided in favour of the affirmative. Mr. Goodwill delivered the address stating the decision, in which he gave the contesting parties credit for the intelligent and splendid manner in which they handled their subject. Sixty per cent. was allowed for matter, and 40 per cent. for delivery.

An enjoyable programme added to the pleasure of the occasion, and the orchestra enlivened the proceedings during the intervals between speeches, by rendering several appropriate selections. The programme consisted of a solo by Mr. P. Naish; solo, Mr. Fleming; banjo solo, by Mr. Clarke, and a vocal solo by Mr. E. Naish. The programme was very much appreciated, every number bringing forth loud applause. Mr Harrington presided very acceptably as chairman.

The Debate.

The debate, of course, was the feature of the evening, and was not finished until about 10.30. Mr. Ellis, the leader of the affirmative was the first called on. He handled his subject in a straightforward and very clear and intelligent manner. In dealing with his subject, he said in part: "Leave it to the women themselves, and you will see that three-quarters of them are against it, which, in itself is very good proof. Women are occupying the position that God intended them. When he made the world He fitted man to fill man's place. At that time he had to guard against wild animals, etc., and he has held a relative position ever since, and, in fact, his position today is more like that than ever; as the struggle against combines is even worse than the one against wild animals. It is harder to make a living, and a man must put up a strenuous fight in order to do so. Women, on the other hand, were intended for a different work in life. They occupy a different position from that of the male sex. They are the mothers of the race. They exercise their influence over the men. I said that the women did not want the franchise, and you may ask, what are the Suffragettes? They are a class that comprise about 2 per cent. of the women, and are defined as women who fight the police, break glass windows, and indulge in general rowdyism, and most of them would probably be glad to give up the vote, if they defined votes. The definition for Suffragette has been defined in a New York paper, as a woman, who, having failed to catch a voter, is now trying to catch a vote. They are a class by themselves that get arrested by the police, while doing damage to private and public property, and some are sent to gaol. All this shows their political sagacity, when they go and break windows, etc., to exercise the franchise. I do not believe, however, that this bunch of people represent the true spirit of the women of to-day. The women are too proud of the position they hold, to stoop so low, as to indulge and mix up in politics. Because, if women go into politics, politics will get a hold on women, and debase, instead of elevate them. Women comprise one-half the population of the earth, and over three-quarters of them are against the franchise. Women, as a rule, would rather stay at home, than go to the polls to vote. Not ten per cent. of the people in Toronto used their vote when the vote on local option was taken. Then, in view of this, where is humanity going to benefit. If women are going to vote they will have to take men's places in other ways. They will have to go as jurors, and I claim that this is not necessary, and they are not any more respected by mixing up in such matters."

Fifteen minutes, the allowance of time for the leaders, was then up, and Mr. I. D. Moore, leader of the negative, was called upon to state his side of the subject.

Mr. Moore's Speech.

Mr. I. D. Moore, after congratulating his opponent for the clever speech he had made, and after a few introductory remarks, plunged into his subject, saying, in part, as follows: "My opponent would have you believe that all women, if they had a vote, would be like the suffragettes. That is possible, but very unlikely. It is again charged that they will not vote, when they have a vote. The figures in the American general election, show that over 90 per cent. of them voted. Then again, my opponent stated that the women would make very poor jurors on account of not being able to agree. There are lots of men who cannot agree, so no stock should be taken of that. The move to give women a vote, is not a movement of to-day. It is an ancient move, and has been the means of raising woman from the chains of slavery and elevating her to the standard of man. We find her in the newspaper business, doctors, lawyers, and architects, and such like, and if women are capable of occupying positions like that, they are capable of using the franchise as well as the men. Where they have had the franchise, things in general have improved. In Australia, see the splendid condition of the law. Good men, not good measures, was their cry, because they knew if they got the good men in, the good measures would follow, and the men knew that they would have to be good and make good laws, or they would not get the women's vote. The movement has led up to better conditions of government, better marriage laws, better protection for the home and children, and everything is placed on a higher level. Outside of the argument of better results, it is only human justice. Women comprise the half of the population, and they are governed by the same laws as men, and they are tried by a male judge. The rich do not legislate satisfactorily for the poor; then why should men legislate satisfactorily for the women?

It is not right that a woman's power and influence should stop at her own door. More women are going through college to-day than men, and they are better educated, and in any place where they have had equal rights, things will show an improvement. I, in conclusion, challenge the affirmative to mention any state, county, or colony, where women have been given the right, where they have withdrawn the franchise to women."

Mr. Gilchrist.

Mr. Gilchrist was next called upon and in a very forcible address, endeavoured to gain a few points for the affirmative. "Let us understand what we are talking about," he commenced. "You will see it is an unfair thing for woman, herself, to exercise the franchise. It is not a privilege. It is a duty—a heavy duty, for they are doing something that will regulate the nation's affairs. Will you ask a woman to don a uniform to go and meet the nation's battles? Then why ask her to cast a vote? Will you ask her to don a police officer's uniform and go and enforce liquor laws, or to put on a fireman's uniform, and go and fight fires? If she is going to take a man's place in one place, why not take it all through? We don't want her to. She is not fitted to wield the weapons of diplomacy. Is she fitted to be a diplomat? No. She must have a knowledge of the affairs of the whole world—it is impossible that she should be. She is not at all in a position to exercise the franchise. If women had a vote, they would have the balance of power, because they are in the majority. Why should she have the privilege of exercising franchise, and, by her lack of knowledge, make war and trouble, and the men then have to go and fight, and get out of the difficulty. The majority of women are uneducated, and as a result they would get their ideas on political issues from their husbands. If she had a vote, she would not use it, for only two per cent. of the women in New York city voted at the last election. Then it would lead you to think that those who do not vote are the unintelligent. This is a very wrong idea; it is the very opposite. These women go out and leave their children and neglect their homes, and their business, in order that they may mix up in politics and things they know nothing about. This same thing has driven men to drink. Theodore Roosevelt has stated that in States where they have the franchise, things are not improved any, as far as he can see. The child labour law went through independent of the women vote, and as far as women being given heavy sentences by male judges, a man ever gave a woman a heavier sentence than she would have been given by any suffragette, and, in most cases, they get off lighter. A man is a man every time."

Mr. Nixon's Address.

Mr. Nixon, second for the negative, was called. "Better as they are to-day," quoted the speaker. "Have our worthy opponents proved that they are any better to-day. All men are not physically able to be police or soldiers, or firemen, and yet they have a vote. Who is more diplomatic than a woman? They say women are not capable of looking after the finances of the country. Who looks after the finances of the home, generally? My opponent referred to the low class of women having a vote. These people do not vote. They prefer to keep quiet and unobserved. Is a woman not good enough to vote? They are too good, and that is the reason why so many fellows are voting against them. I think it is a great moral question. They are interested in public morality and public good in general. Everybody knows that if women stopped going to church, there would soon be spider webs across the doors. Newspaper editors are in favour, 8 to 1, for the franchise for women, and it is considered but another step in the emancipation of women. Married women must use what is known as the silent influence. How about the drunkard? He has a vote. Where does the women's silent influence come in there? All that the mother is she gives to the race; then should she not have a vote? She will refine politics and purify them. There are a few bad women as well as bad men, but because there are a few, that is no reason why they should all be condemned. We would have local option here to-day if the women had votes. The facts are established. They want true democracy, not one where all are governed by a few.

Mr. Ellis Replied.

Mr. Ellis, leader of the affirmative, then replied in a short speech. "Fields are green far away," he said. "My opponents have taken us away into the Southern States; but let us view the conditions nearer home. When the women of Toronto were asked to vote on local option, they did not come out to vote. Then my opponent stated that the women of the underworld do not come out to vote. Take some of the States, for instance. They come out to vote, and the really intelligent and good women remained in their homes, with the results that the Government was over thrown in a good many cases, because of the corruption. To hear the way my opponent brought out that "silent influence" you would think that it did not amount to a hill of beans, but statements from American women themselves, have proven the failure of women's suffrage, and they say that they would stamp it out now if they had the opportunity."

The judges then retired to consider the merits and after due consideration of the points brought out on either side, returned with the decision in favour of the affirmative.

The singing of the National Anthem brought to a close what proved to be a very enjoyable and interesting evening.

RESTORE GRAY HAIR TO NATURAL COLOUR

By Common Garden Sage, a Simple Remedy for Dandruff, Falling, Faded, Gray Hair

The old idea of using sage for darkening the hair is again coming in vogue. Our grandmothers used to have dark, glossy hair at the age of seventy-five, while our mothers have white hair before they are fifty. Our grandmothers used to make a sage tea and apply it to their hair. The tea made their hair soft and glossy, and gradually restored the natural color.

One objection to using such a preparation was the trouble of making it, especially as it had to be made every two or three days, on account of souring quickly. This objection has been overcome, and by asking almost any first-class druggist for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy the public can get a superior preparation of sage, with the admixture of sulphur, another valuable remedy for hair and scalp troubles. Daily use of this preparation will not only quickly restore the colour of the hair, but will also stop the hair from falling out and make it grow.

Get a bottle from your druggist today. Use it and see for yourself how quickly dandruff goes and gray hairs vanish.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.—Wyeth Drug Co., special agents.

MISSIONARY CANVASS IN ST. PAUL'S CHURCH A SUCCESS

Some time ago the local Presbyterians set out to increase the amount of their missionary givings. The effort was undertaken in response to an appeal from the General Assembly to the whole Presbyterian Church in Canada to raise for the year 1912 the sum of one million dollars, as its Missionary budget. St. Paul's Church was asked to aim at $5,000. A canvass of the entire congregation was made by the Elders and Managers of the Church. The congregation was divided into districts, and an Elder and Manager went together, and called upon all in the district assigned them. The actual amount subscribed to date is over $4,600. There are a few to hear from yet, and this, with the amount which the Sunday School and Bible Classes will contribute, will raise the total giving over beyond $5,000. In addition to this the Women's Foreign Missionary Society will give over $1,000. So that the members of St. Paul's Church are pledged to give about $6,000 a year to all missionary purposes. Part of this amount is to be applied to the support of their own missionary. The Rev. D. A. Macdonald, B.A., who is about to go to China, has been assigned to St. Paul's. He is to spend the next week in the city visiting the congregation and addressing a number of meetings. He will preach at both services on Sabbath, and address the Sunday School. He will address the different Young People's organizations and Mission Bands on Monday night. On Tuesday evening the ladies are preparing a banquet for the men of the church. Mr. Macdonald and Mr. E. A. Armstrong of Toronto, and others, will address the meeting. Mr. Macdonald will also address the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting and the Women's Foreign Missionary Society on Friday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock.

ELECTED OFFICERS

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Club was held in the club rooms last evening. There was a large turnout of members. Mr. R. E. Wood, the retiring president was in the chair. The annual sale of periodicals which was conducted by Mr. McIlroy resulted satisfactorily financially. After the general business had been disposed of, the officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President—Mr. T. E. Matthews.

Vice-President—Mr. E. G. Patterson.

Member of the Executive committee for a period of three years—Messrs. Denham, McIlroy and C. E. Macleod.

Mr. Hazen Ritchie was elected a member of the executive to replace Mr. E. G. Patterson, who was elected to the Vice-President's chair.

The most important matter to be brought before the meeting was the repeal of the committee regarding the extension of the club building. Plans and specifications were produced, showing the nature of the extension, and Mr. Belcher's report was enthusiastically received by the meeting. The committee were given instructions to proceed at once to make arrangements which will result in the erection of a new addition without delay.

With the new extension, the Peterborough Club quarters will compare favourably with those in the larger cities.

MILLIONS OF GERMS

You Must Kill Them or Lose Your Hair Newbro's Herpicide Prevents Baldness

The dandruff germ is a deadly enemy to healthy, luxuriant hair. No matter how thick heavy and beautiful your hair may look, the dandruff germ may be there at work and very busy, too.

Just as sure as you do not take steps to check the ravages of this germ, just so sure you will sooner or later lose your hair.

Baldness may always be prevented by the timely use of Newbro's Herpicide. Herpicide is sure death to the dandruff germ. It cleans the scalp and allows the hair to grow as nature intended. Nehemiah Rebuilds the Wall of Jerusalem. Neh. iv.

Golden Text—Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong, 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

(1.) Verse 1—What progress had been made up to this time in rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem, and how had the work been done?

(2.) What right had Sanballat to object to building the wall, and why did he do it?

(3.) What did they expect to accomplish by mocking at, and jeering the Jews?

(4.) Can you give any instance when mocking and ridicule have stopped a good work, or ruined a good life?

(5.) Verses 2-3—What is it in human nature which makes individuals jealous of individuals, towns of towns, and countries of countries?

(6.) When a man is down, do the human influences around him tend to keep him down, or help him up? Why?

(7.) Which gets the more hurt from scorning, the scorner or the scorned and why?

(8.) What influences did the rabble of Sanballat and Tobiah have on the work upon the wall?

(9.) If one is true to God does the devil mostly hurt or help him, in his life and work?

(10.) Verses 4-6 Is any experience that will give us the opportunity to pray, and to test God's power to be regretted?

(11.) Should the prayer of Nehemiah that God would not forgive them but that they might suffer for their sins, be imitated by us? Give your reasons.

(12.) Verses 7-8 What reasons are there to believe that those who are jealous of the prosperity of others, will not stop short of actual violence to accomplish their evil desires, if they can do so with safety to themselves?

(13.) Verse 9—What are two effectual things we may always do, when we are surrounded by enemies?

(14.) Is prayer without watching, or watching without prayer, of any avail if we have the opportunity to do both?

(15.) Verses 10-12—Which, as a rule does us the more injury, the opposition of enemies, or the pessimistic discouragement of friends?

(16.) Verses 13-14 What effect did the threat of his enemies, and the wail of his own countrymen, have upon Nehemiah?

(17.) How often is a determined man with God on his side liable to be defeated in things he undertakes?

(18.) Verse 15 — What factor is courage alone, in winning life's battles? (This is one of the questions that may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(19.) Verses 16-23 In how many senses is a Christian under obligation to fight and to build all the time?

(20.) Why may we rely on God fighting our battles for us, if we fight and work with Him?

A Concert And Social

St. Peters' Ladies Literary Society held their second fortnightly meeting in the St. Alphonsus Lyceum last evening.

Despite the adverse weather conditions the seating capacity of the hall was taxed to its utmost and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Prior to the lecture a good programme of music was rendered. A splendid pianoforte solo was played by Miss A. Sullivan, and an equally acceptable vocal solo was sung by Miss F. Leahy. The contributions of Mr. V. McCabe and the Misses G. McCarthy and G. Delaire in the forms of a violin solo and a vocal duo respectively, were also well received by the gathering. Miss M. A. O'Connell read a paper on the Life of Champlain, a synopsis of which is here given:

Champlain was born in 1567 at Bronage, in the Bay of Biscay. His father was a captain in the French navy, in which profession his son got his early training. Possessing an adventurous spirit he later in life sailed to the West Indies, where he remained for 2 1-2 years. He returned home and in 1603 sailed from Harfleur, reaching Arcadia, now Nova Scotia, March 1604. After visiting Port Ray he again returned to his native land, but he is restless. In 1618 Champlain again sailed from Harfleur and with him the embryo life of Canada. Champlain was the first man to carry a permanent colony to the new world. Reaching and crossing the gulf of Tadousac, a gang of axe men were soon at work. The little colony, however, were destined to experience trouble from disease, and the Iroquois, and on the passing of the winter, out of 28 Frenchmen only eight survived. After a conquest of the Iroquois, the settlement of Quebec was commenced. Champlain preferred exploration to the duller task of building colonies, so in 1613 he ascended the Ottawa river to find the north-west passage. Champlain was the first white man to set foot upon the site of the present capital. Owing to the efforts of Champlain, missionaries now commenced to emigrate, and Father Dolbean had the happiness of celebrating the first mass ever said in the rude rock of the little colony. After finding their way to Huron, Champlain and twelve Frenchmen began their march homeward, through Lake Simcoe, down the chain of Kawartha Lakes, down our rushing Otonabee to the Trent river, and from thence to the Bay of Quinte, and after a voyage of 35 days, Champlain beheld the sparkling waters of Lake Ontario. In 1620 Champlain returned to France and began an emigration campaign. He returned later, and in 1629 an English expedition, under Sir David Kirk, conquered the settlement, and Champlain and the Jesuits were taken to England. In 1632 the colony was again restored to France, and in 1633, Champlain set sail for Quebec, bearing his commission as Governor of Canada. Of the foremost pioneers of Canada says Parkman, he is of the foremost. In 1908, France and England each paid homage to the memory of the founder of Canada in the erecting of a monument. His noble career of patriotism and religion was recognized in life and is remembered faithfully in the present day.

Christmas Goodies in Great Variety

Thoughts of Christmas always mean thoughts of good things to eat—the extra-good kind, presented to us in new and beautiful and appropriate forms—gaily coloured cards, accompanying beautifully decorated Christmas boxes of delicious sweets.

See the Christmas displays of Fry's Chocolates, for example, in all the good stores. What a wealth of beautiful and unique ideas they present! All with the idea of making Christmas time more attractive and more enjoyable.

From the newsboy on the corner with his pennies, to the young man who is anxious to give his sweetheart the very finest assortment of the very choicest chocolates, done up in the most gorgeous style, everyone finds in the Fry display of Christmas goodies something to please the eye and gratify keen appetite. Nothing could better emphasize the progress which is being made in anticipating the public's taste and preferences than the display as specially prepared for the Canadian market by the great English house of Fry. The reputation of this firm for quality and excellence is world wide.

The Fry nut milk chocolate cakes are great favourites, closely followed by the delicious chocolate creams. But then the Fry assortment is so large that there is something good to suit every candy taste.

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

The first anniversary services of Knox Church will be held on Sunday, December 10th. Rev. Dr. Barclay, the eminent Divine, well known throughout Great Britain and Canada, and pastor of St. Paul's Church, Montreal, will occupy the pulpit at both services.

A supper and concert will be given on the Tuesday following, so as not to conflict with the elections, which take place on the preceding Monday. Supper will be served from 5.30 to 8 o'clock. The services of Mr. J. A. Kelly, the well-known ventriloquist, has been secured and together with the local Scotch talent, which has been provided, a good entertainment will undoubtedly result.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders Later come dropsy, stone rheumatic pains, and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again.

FIGHT FOLLOWED HEATED ARGUMENT

Two local men got into an altercation outside of a Simcoe street hotel this morning. The row was the outcome of a bar-room argument, which became so complicated that the parties concerned, finally decided to settle their differences out on the street. A large crowd quickly gathered, and the fight waxed hot. Finally the lesser of the two men handed out a knock-out in the solar plexus that made his opponent bite the dust. This ended the matter, and the would-be pugilist did the disappearing act in less time than it takes to tell it.

PROOF FOR WOMEN WHO STILL SUFFER

THAT THEY CAN FIND RELIEF IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mrs. Lois McKay suffered from Pains in the Back, Side and in the region of the Heart—Dodd's Kidey Pills cured her.

Tiverton, Digby Co., N.S., Dec. 1.—Every day seems to bring a message of cheer for the weak, run-down women of Canada. To-day's message comes from Mrs. Lois McKay, a well-known resident of this place. She, like others, has found new life in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Before I used Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mrs. McKay states, "I suffered with a bad pain in my back and side, pains in my bowels, and sharp, cutting pains around my heart.

"I was always tired. Sometimes when I sat down I could hardly get up out of the chair. But thanks to Dodd's Kidney Pills, my pain is all gone and my back is well. I have proven for myself that Dodd's Kidney Pills are good. Female trouble is nearly always caused by diseased Kidneys. The position of the female organs and the Kidneys shows how one is dependent on the other. Thats' why weak women find new life in Dodd's Kidney Pills. They always cure diseased Kidneys.

WEDDING BELLS

CLARKE—WINANS.

On Wednesday at 6 o'clock a very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. Winans, Newmarket, when their niece, Ada M. Pringle, was united in marriage to Mr. E. J. Clarke, of Toronto.

The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Mr. Simpson, under an arch and bell of smilax and yellow 'mums, the drawing rooms being decorated with the same.

The bride looked charming in a gown of white liberty satin, with trimmings of duchess lace and seed pearls. The bridal veil caught with orange blossoms, and carried white roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid was Miss Edna A. Pringle, sister of the bride, and she wore pink satin, in white marquisette with crystal trimmings and carried pink roses. Miss Hilda Morton was flower girl, dressed in pale yellow and carried white 'mums. Mr. N. St. Clair Miller, of Peterborough, was groomsman.

The wedding march was played by Miss Laura Knight and during the signing of the register Miss Knight sang Love's Coronation.

After a dainty luncheon the happy couple left for a short honeymoon, the bride going away in a navy blue velvet suit with hat to match, and ermine furs. They were the recipients of many beautiful presents from the many guests and friends.—Star.

ONTARIO LADIES' COLLEGE

The annual meeting of shareholders and directors of the Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby, took place last week in the College board room, and was largely attended. The reports from the executive committee, the Faculty committee and from Dr. Hare, principal, clearly indicated that the past year was the most successful in the history of the College in attendance, income and educational results. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed throughout the meeting, and reached its culmination when Dr. Hare outlined what had been accomplished in thirty-seven years of patient, well-directed effort, and what greater things were yet in store for the College. All present rose to their feet to signify their hearty appreciation and approval. At the present time every room in the College is occupied, and four are on the waiting list, to enter immediately after the Christmas holidays, when some vacancies will occur.

It was unanimously decided that when the gymnasium, reading room and hospital, which are now in process of erection, are completed, steps will be taken to extend Ryerson Hall to the north, to provide additional accommodation for the boarders.

The following were elected officers of the Board: Hon. Senator Cox, Hon. President; Rev. Dr. Graham and Rev. J. J. Redtt, Hon. Vice-Presidents; Mr. R. C. Hamilton, President; Mr. R. J. Score, 1st Vice-President; Mr. L. F. Barclay, 2nd Vice-President; Mr. John Rice, Sec.-Treasurer.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson K1810 Luck Building, Detroit Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

LAID TO REST

The funeral of the late Mrs. Melville Wilson of London, took place this afternoon.

The Rev. H. J. Keith officiated at a very impressive service at the residence of her father, Mr. J. W. Buyers, 217 Townsend street, at 2.30, after which the funeral cortege proceeded to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

A very large number of friends assembled at the funeral to show sympathy for the relatives, and a last mark of esteem for the deceased, who was beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to know her. There was a magnificent display of floral tributes, amongst which were wreaths from the following: The B. of L. E. and the B. of L. F and E., of London, the Independent Order of Foresters, Knox Church, the Novelti Co., (where the deceased was employed prior to her marriage) and from the C. P. R. employees of Peterborough. Following were some of the out-of-town visitors: Mr and Mrs. E. J. Woollard of Bobcaygeon; Mrs. J. Match of Toronto, and Mr. Percy Wilson of Toronto.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. Roy Lang, Walter Paton, Roy Menzies, J. Brownlee, Cecil Williamson, and Percy Wilson.

COOLING OF MILK

From Farm and Dairy.

In spite of what has been published in the farm papers and urged by the dairy schools, there are yet comparatively few farmers who pay any attention to the proper cooling of milk.

Clean, properly cared for milk vessels play an important part in the production of pure and wholesome dairy products. Dirty pails, cans and other dairy utensils mean dirty milk and dirty products.

There should always be a friendly feeling between the cow and her milker. The milker who is gentle with the animals in his charge and who takes time to pet them a little as he goes about his work will usually get all the milk the udders contain, while, on the other hand, the man who is rough and noisy is certain to lessen the milk flow materially.

The farmer who doesn't use a pure bred dairy bull in his herd will give you every reason but the right one why he uses a scrub. The right one is that he hasn't gumption enough to get into better stock.

"DEAR OLD BILLY" COMING DEC. 14TH

It will be good news to the theatregoers of Peterborough to learn that Mr. William Hawtrey, the famous English comedian, will appear at the Grand Opera House here on December 14th, in his new comedy, "Dear Old Billy," in which he has been drawing packed houses at the Princess Theatre in Toronto this week. Mr. Hawtrey is a very clever comedian and his vehicle is said to be decidedly funny.

A RUNAWAY

A horse belonging to the A. Longo Co., George street fruit merchants, made a bold dash for liberty today at noon. But its attempts in this direction were frustrated by the prompt action of Mr. Fife who, with a parcel in one hand, rushed out into the road and grabbed the runaway by the bridle, bringing it to a standstill. That the horse was determined to escape, was evidenced by the fact that Mr. Fife was dragged along the road for several yards before he was able to bring the animal to a standstill.

Daring Animal Operations.

The great feat just performed by Prof. Wooldridge at the Zoo in setting the fractured jaws of the famous nine-yards-long python is a reminder of the remarkable progress made in operating upon animals.

Perhaps the greatest dental operation on record was performed upon an elephant in the city of Mexico. The sawing tooth was 12 inches long and 14 inches in diameter at the root. After the animal had been securely fastened with chains, his mouth was prised open, and a quantity of cocaine applied to deaden the pain. When this was done, a hole was bored through the tooth, and an iron bar inserted. Then a rope was twisted around the bar, and four horses were attached thereto to drag the offending molar out.

The Word "Good-Bye."

In the changes that have come in our language we have sometimes crowded a whole sentence into a single word. Our word for farewell is one of these. In Shakespeare's time one said to his friends at parting, "God be wi' ye." From that time we have clipped it more and more till now it has come to be simply "good-bye." But it is surely pleasant to remember when we bid our friends good-bye that we are saying to them in good old Saxon phrase, "God be with you."

R. R. HALL'S ADDRESS

TO THE ELECTORS OF WEST PETERBOROUGH

In Which He Sets Forth His Platform as Justification of the Support of the Electors---To Safeguard Popular Rights and Promote Progressive Measures

GENTLEMEN:

As the unanimously nominated candidate of the Liberals of this Riding, it is incumbent upon me to suggest some of the considerations and features of policy I favour in order to justify me in soliciting your support. I therefore submit to you some of the main planks of the Liberal platform and my own on which I stand and if, as a result of your support, I am elected, I shall use my best endeavours to have them given effect.

WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION ACT

The Workman's Compensation Act should be radically remodelled, embodying the best features of the English and German Acts and extended so that full and ample damages may be given to a workman or his family on account of any injury he may sustain in the course of his employment and that without a law suit.

Moreover, the workman or his family under such a law should not be called upon to fight an expensive law suit in the courts with a wealthy corporation and be dragged from one Court of Appeal to another with the evident advantage in the long run to the longest purse, or else be compelled to accept a mere pittance for the injury he has sustained.

THE FACTORIES ACT

In order to prevent accidents to workmen, provision should be made for a more frequent inspection by competent inspectors, whose duty should be to see that dangerous machinery and places are properly guarded, fire escapes furnished, sanitary and ventilation facilities improved, and every step taken to protect and preserve the life, limb and health of employees.

Many accidents happen to employees due to working them too long hours. The employer should be made liable for this increased risk. He should either be compelled to give shorter hours to his employees or else be compelled to assume increased risk which follows in consequence of an employee being over-tired and over-worked.

EDUCATION

A more progressive and adequate educational policy is urgently needed. More liberal grants should be given in aid of primary education, in the promotion of industrial training and technical schools in urban and rural communities; and in the establishment of night schools for the benefit of those who have been forced to leave school at an early age to earn their own living. Model schools should be restored with a view of increasing the supply of efficient and qualified teachers.

Two great general principles should underlie our educational system in this English-speaking province which forms such an important part of this English-speaking continent, namely:

(a) Every child in the Province should have a thorough elementary education.
(b) Every child should have a thorough knowledge of the English language.

To attain this end, necessary laws and regulations should be passed and enforced and liberal aid should be given to provide further adequate training schools and a sufficient supply of competent and qualified teachers for every School Section in every part of the Province.

Were this done, tens of thousands of our fellow citizens would not be as they are now deprived of the opportunity of acquiring any knowledge of the English language.

AGRICULTURE

The rural population of Ontario is declining in this Province, which contains the richest and best farm lands on this continent. This state of affairs can be reversed by bringing about the active immigration into this Province of suitable people for settlement and employment upon our farm lands; by the building of good roads throughout Ontario, and thereby facilitating traffic and insuring quick delivery of farm and garden produce; by increasing the rural telephone service; by the location of a demonstrator in every rural riding, and by the establishment of suitable demonstration farms in each riding, and by showing to the farmers through such demonstration farms the results of successful experiments in every branch of agriculture.

NEW ONTARIO

New Ontario should be developed and settled and its railway facilities utilized and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway should be made to do service as a colonization road, and should be extended to the Hudson Bay, and branches should be built as the development of the country demands.

A speedy end should be put to the neglect to settle, and develop, the agricultural possibilities of New Ontario, such as has marked the past seven years. A government with an earnest desire to do something to develop the agricultural possibilities of this splendid farming region, would do something to facilitate its settlement which is now handicapped from lack of roads to give new settlers access to or egress from their premises. Without roads or the sympathic attitude of a government the settler in New Ontario is greatly handicapped and the settlement of the country is correspondingly retarded.

TAXATION

The Assessment Act should be so amended so as to permit a municipality, if it so desires, to exempt improvements from taxation, either in whole or in part, and to provide for the removal of the existing inequalities of taxation.

AID TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS

The alarming prevalence of tuberculosis calls for the aid of the Provincial Government, which it is not now receiving, (and is rudely denied) to assist in the provision of facilities for curative or pallative treatment for those whose means prevent this. To this end I would favor amendment of the Succession Duties Act so as to impose an additional percentage of taxation on the estates of very wealthy men, say $250,000.00 and over, to provide a fund to be devoted to the maintenance of tuberculosis sanitaria and the aid of the work of the Children's Aid Society.

PROVINCIAL AID TO RADIAL RAILWAYS

Peterborough is particularly well located for the establishment of a system of radial railways in this district owing to the large number of water powers that would furnish cheap operation. These railways would provide the city with more of the necessaries of life at a cheaper rate; would furnish cheaper and better accommodation to farmers in bringing their produce to market; and attract tourists to our summer resorts. Aid should be given to attain this end, with a percentage of profits to be returned to the Province, after roads are in operation and earning reasonable dividends.

In addition to what I have above recited I shall feel it my duty to support any measure to meet the legitimate demands of a progressive people. If you think that I shall be able to give you valuable and effective, as it shall be my aim to give you, faithful service, I respectfully ask your vote and support.

As it will be impossible for me to personally call upon all the Electors, I trust that this means of communicating my position will meet with your approval and secure me the favour of your vote and support.

Yours respectfully,

R. R. HALL

HOCKEY PLAYERS HAVE THEIR FIRST WORKOUT

All intermediate and junior hockey players in the city are reminded of the training course in the Y.M.C.A. on Monday night at 7 o'clock. Every man who wants to play the game this winter is expected to be out in order to qualify. The management has gone to a lot of expense and trouble to arrange for this preliminary training and the players will have to take the course if they expect to be considered as possibilities for the teams. They should come provided with a pair of rubber shoes and some kind of a gymnasium outfit. There was a squad out last night for the first time and Mr. Thompson put them through a brisk hour's work, consisting of throwing the medicine ball, running, free hand exercise, dumbbell drill and basketball, winding up with a shower bath and swim in the plunge. The boys enjoyed the work immensely. President Sam Ray Vice-President Picard, Executive member McGeachie, Trainer Dillon, Jack Thirnbeck and other hockey enthusiasts watched the workout with interest from the gallery. Players should remember Monday night's workout.

PARK ST. JUNIOR LEAGUERS' SUCCESSFUL CONCERT

There was an enjoyable evening in St. James' Methodist Church Sunday School room, last night, when the Junior Epworth League held a successful concert. It was also the occasion of the bringing in of the missionary money, collected by the Leaguers, and was, in effect, a harvest gathering. During the evening the members have made use of mite boxes, shaped in imitation of fruits, and last evening these were opened, with the result that a sum slightly over $30 wa srealized. Fifty boys and girls took part in the following programme:

Chorus, "Dropping Pennies".
Recitation, Eva Payne.
Piano duet, Misses Palmer and Gillespie.
Solo—Ruby Moss.
Recitation, Bert Jeffries.
Selection on hand bells, Mrs. Braund.
Dialogue, "Honesty is the Best Policy," by nine boys.
Piano duet, Misses Smith and Kemp.
Recitation—Mary Wood.
Hoop drill, 12 girls.
Violin duet, Lois Braund and Baden Greene.
Recitation, "Both Sides of the Question", Minnie Thornbeck, Geo. Robinson.
Solo, "Dow Me Over the Tide", M. Gray.
Recitation, "The Boy, Jesus," Earl Barrie.
Song, "O Canada," seven Leaguers
Rev. J. C. Brown made a capable chairman. The ladies who had the affair in charge and the members of the Junior League are to be congratulated upon the great success which attended their efforts.

GERMS SPREAD IN SKIN

Eczema, Psoriasis, and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seemed a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing disease with its years and years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble, but have never—never seen such remarkable cures as those from D.D.D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D.D.D. or why not drop a line to the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. P.E., 49 Colborne St., Toronto.

We know that D.D.D. will help you.

McDermid and Jury and E. L. Payne.

A STATEMENT FROM MR. PECK

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been directed to three letters, which have appeared in the Examiner, during the present week. As they contain personal reference to myself, may I ask you to publish this brief reply:

1. "Anxious Parent" suggests that I have a financial interest in a Brewery, meaning, I presume, the Calcutt Brewing Company. This is not correct. I am Solicitor for the Company and am the holder of one share of stock (value $100), but I hold this merely as a Trustee for another party, and I have no personal financial interest in the Company.

2. "E. W. H." refers to my acting as arbitrator between Printers and Employers, some years ago. The other arbitrators were Mr. Robert McGregor and Mr. T. F. Matthews. We then went into the matter thoroughly, collecting information as to rates of wages in other localities, and finally agreed upon a basis of settlement, giving a substantial increase in wages to the Printers. The award, if it is available, should establish this. We all, including Mr. McGregor, who represented the Printers, signed the award, and I had the impression until quite recently that Mr. McGregor was satisfied that it was a fair one. If he was not satisfied with it, why did he sign it?

3. "Consistency" endeavours to stir up a feeling of the Sons of England against me, because I am not now a member of the Order. I was a member of the Order for many years. I held the office of Secretary for some time, and was afterwards President, but of late years demands upon my time have prevented me from attending the meetings, or assisting to further its objects, and, having no need for the benefits, I concluded to sever my connection as a financial member. These are the only reason why I am not now a member. The Society is a very worthy one and I shall always feel interested in its progress.

Yours truly,
E. A. PECK.

GET THE HABIT

Get the habit of hauling manure to the field every day as it is taken from the barn. The sooner manure is spread in the field, the smaller the loss of fertility occurred, and the smaller the amount of labor required to handle it.

Keep the stock comfortable. There is probably no term that signifies more regarding the condition in which stock should be kept than the term, "comfortable"; and if one bears this in mind, and keeps his stock comfortable—that is, not hungry or cold, or excited, or standing in an uncomfortable position, or sleeping in an uncomfortable bed, — his returns will be satisfactory.

Visit the school. The boys and girls and the teacher will be greatly pleased and encouraged if you show enough interest in the school to devote a half-day's time to visiting and showing your interest in it. A few words of encouragement to the pupils and teacher will give them increased interest in their work, and increase their enthusiasm for the school and for the community.

Do not fail to attend the Institute held in your community. The Institutes are for you. The men who speak at these Institutes are practical farmers who have succeeded. While you know better than anyone else how to run your own farm, finding out how other people do things will do you no harm, and you may hear something that will mean additional profits and pleasure to you.

Potatoes for seed should be carefully stored where the temperature will be as low as possible without freezing the potatoes. Narrow bins, slightly raised from the floor, and with slatted sides, are much better for storing seed-potatoes than are tight bins. Cellars can often be kept reasonably cool, early in the fall and in the spring, by leaving the windows open at night and closing them in the day-time.

Study and master at least one farm problem during the leisure time this winter. There is a great deal of reliable information available on nearly every farm problem, and certainly this information is worth more to a farmer than to anyone else. A careful and systematic study of some problem—perhaps some new phase of your work that you are just taking up—may be instrumental in making that industry profitable and interesting.

There is one delightful thing about farming, which is not true of some other industries, and that is that each farmer is really benefited by the success of his neighbors. In a progressive neighborhood, where good stock is kept and where farming is generally profitable, roads and schools are better, the price of farm land is higher; and, owing to the fact that a great quantity of farm products is offered for sale, markets are better; so boost your neighbours, and by so doing help yourself.

We urge that all farmers at this time consider the matter of the selection of seed for next spring. One hundred bushels of heavy, plump seed, graded from 400 or 500 bushels of grain as threshed this fall, is probably the best possible seed you can get for your farm. This plump seed comes from plants that, by producing plump seed, demonstrated their adaptability to your locality, and their ability to avoid injury from disease. By grading your seed, you not only have heavy, plump, strong seed, but seed that has in a measure been bred for your particular conditions.

Eggs Remain At 40 Cents

There was a big market this morning. The inside market was crowded to its capacity, making it almost impossible to move around. The prices remained high, although there was an abundance of everything, except eggs, which are at a premium. Fresh eggs are selling at 40c a dozen, while those not strictly fresh are selling at 35c. Apart from the general routine of proceedings there was a little accident, which might have proven more serious than just a joke. In the crowd an old man came in contact with the sharp end of a feather in a lady's hat. The point penetrated the edge of his eye, but no serious injury resulted. "If it isn't' hat-pins, it's feathers," snarled the victim."

VOYAGE AT AN END

King and Queen Are Welcomed in Bombay

RECEIVED BY OFFICIALS

Bombay, Dec. 4.—"King-Emperor" George, and "Queen-Empress" Mary, as they are officially styled since their arrival in their great eastern empire, landed from the steamer Medina on Saturday, at the Quay at the Apollo Bunder at four o'clock.

They were met by the governor of Bombay and a large gathering of high officials belonging to the civil and military service. They at once proceeded to a huge amphitheatre which had been erected opposite the landing stage and which was filled to its utmost capacity with many thousands who had come to welcome Their Majesties.

The scene was a remarkably brilliant one. The handsome levee dress of the officials and the uniforms of the naval and military officers, together with the bright toilettes of the women, only served to emphasize the gorgeous hues of the ceremonial attire of the Indian chieftains.

Behind these were massed an immense throng composed of Hindus, Mohammedans, Parsea and Arabs, all attired in richly colored festival costumes.

Addresses of welcome were presented to the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress, by the municipality and other bodies, to which His Majesty replied.

A royal procession was subsequently formed. It was a mile in length and comprised representatives of all branches of the European and native armies in India. It subsequently traversed all parts of the gaily decorated city.

The native quarters presented a quaint appearance, forests of masts along the streets bearing a multitude of native religious symbols, representative of the various sects.

Enormous crowds everywhere heartily acclaimed Their Majesties, who returned to the Medina at 5.30 in the evening

Alleged Murderer Arrested.

Lethbridge, Alta., Dec. 4.—Behind iron bars at the police station, with a special guard in charge, is John M. Anderson, who is believed by the Calgary police to be an accomplice in the murder of John Middleton in Calgary a few days ago. His arrest was accomplished Saturday afternoon by Detective Egan of the city police, who has been working in conjunction with Sergt. Lamb, who was acting at the time as a plain clothesman for special purposes. He was picked up on Crabb street, where it appeared he was about to begin his work of peddling jewelry.

Badly Burned by Electricity.

Toronto, Dec. 4.—While experimenting with the main electrical switch board at the car barns, corner of Frederick and Front streets, late last evening, William Lyons was badly burned about the hands and face. He pulled a switch believing it to be dead, but through which much power was running. He was taken to the General Hospital. He is considered to be in a critical condition. No one saw the accident.

Will Build Own Cars.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 4—The St. John Railway Co., in which James Ross and Sir William Van Horne are leading shareholders, will in future build cars for its system here instead of importing them.

NOMINATIONS TO-DAY.

Liberal Organizer Says There Will Be Few Acclamations.

Toronto, Dec. 4.—All roads to-day lead to the nomination halls. All over the province the official nominations for the Legislature are being held, and very soon the candidates will be doing their utmost to secure their election.

Sir James P. Whitney, Premier of Ontario, will speak at Winchester Springs, Dundas County, at his own nomination. The leader of the Opposition, N. W. Rowell, K.C., will speak at the North Oxford nomination in Woodstock.

Although thirty seats lacked Liberal candidates a week ago, F. G. Inwood, Liberal organiser for the province, was confident that by to-night every vacancy would be filled.

"I don't believe there will be a single acclamation outside of Toronto in the province," he said. "The only constituencies where candidates have not yet been secured are: Carleton, East Durham, East Hastings, West Hastings, North Hastings, Lincoln, London and East Victoria.

Conventions are being held in London, East and West Hastings to-day, and candidates secured.

"This only leaves five constituencies on which I have not received the latest advices, but I am not looking for a single acclamation in the province.

"It will not be necessary to hold conventions in many cases," he said. "as the local executives will name candidates."

Twenty-five members of the last Legislature have not been renominated. Of these eighteen are Conservatives out of eighty-seven, and seven are Liberals out of eighteen.

Including Duncan Ross, who was elected in 1908, there are eight Liberals.

A. E. Hacker of the local Liberals refused to state whether the Liberals would put men in the field for the remaining three York constituencies.

The Independent Labor party has candidates in each constituency in the county, and will put up a strong fight.

DEATH OR INDEPENDENCE.

Persians Appeal to American Legation Against Russia.

Teheran, Dec. 4.—Ten thousand persons carrying banners with the inscription: "Death or Independence," marched to the American legation yesterday and appealed to the Minister to urge the Government to support the American principles of fair play and love of justice.

The English community here is aroused against Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, and think that Mr. Shuster, the Treasurer-General of Persia, outplayed him by revoking the appointments of Englishmen, to which Sir Edward objected. The British correspondents here are making it very plain in their despatches that they believe that the British Foreign Minister is ruining the prestige of his own countrymen, which might be regarded as "Laughable, if it was not tragic."

Two thousand additional Russian troops have arrived thirty miles south of Rosht.

The Cabinet has resigned. A small body of Cossacks have arrived here to protect the Russian legation. Two hundred Cossacks have reached Kasbin. The Russian troops at Rosht have disarmed the local Persian militia and occupied the telegraph office. They are acting as though war had been declared.

Train Crew Exonerated.

Brantford, Dec. 4.—At the inquest into the death of Henry Shaver, who was killed by the Grand Trunk train at Cainsville, on Thursday, when his horses ran away, was held here Saturday evening. A verdict of accidental death was returned and the crew of the train was exonerated. It was recommended, however, by jury that the company should improve loading facilities where Shaver met his death.

LABOUR IN FURORE

McNamara Revelations Cause Widespread Sensation

MANY WANT THEM HANGED

New York, Dec. 4.—The revelations of Los Angeles as to the dynamite outrages in the United States in connection with labor disputes are shaking the American nation to its very foundations.

Organized labor is involved, and is likely to be still further involved.

The revelations are only beginning. There are many more culprits than the McNamaras, and some of them are higher up.

Outrage after outrage has occurred, and the men mixed up with them are likely to be unearthed.

The money for the outrages came from somewhere. Where? The American people are determined to know. The Federal Government is already investigating the Indianapolis outrages, and they will investigate the others with increased energy after the confessions at Los Angeles.

The manufacturers are severe in their criticism of Samuel Gompers, the head of organized labor.

Altogether a most astounding state of affairs is about to be revealed.

Should Pay Penalty.

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 4.—The Central Labor Union of Spokane, representing 4,500 union men, is shaping plans for a country-wide movement to obtain the maximum penalty for the Los Angeles dynamiters. The program is to have every labor union organization in the United States telegraph to the California authorities before next Tuesday morning, urging that the limit sentence allowed by the laws of the state be imposed upon the McNamara brothers for the crimes they have confessed.

Want Them Hanged.

Indianapolis, Dec. 3.—That the McNamara brothers should be hanged, not imprisoned, was the conviction expressed Saturday in statements by officials of three national labor organizations that have headquarters in this city.

"The McNamaras took human life, and, just as in any other case, the penalty should be life for life," declared Frank Duffy, national secretary of the Carpenters' and Joiners' Union "They deluded us, and we went down in our pockets for them. We don't want such men in organized labor."

"It is awful," said J. W. Dougherty, international secretary of the Bookbinders' Union "As far as I am concerned, they cannot hang them up too high to suit me."

Opposes Hanging.

New York, Dec. 4.—"I am not a hound. I am not a hound. I do not seek human life in punishment for any crime."

This was the angry exclamation of Samuel Gompers last night on his return from Troy, when shown a despatch from Spokane stating that the Central Labor Council of that city is planning a country-wide movement to obtain the maximum punishment for the Los Angeles dynamiters. Mr. Gompers made an impatient gesture as he finished reading the despatch and vigorously shook his head.

"I do not believe in capital punishment under any circumstances," he continued. "I do not believe that the state has a right to take human life. This is a very unwise movement. I am against it. It is like the populace in the Roman arena demanding with its thumbs down that the victorious gladiator plunge the sword into his victim. I do not believe in thumbs down for these or any other men."

"What punishment do you think should be meted out to them?" the labor leader was asked.

"Suppose we let the judge decide that, I am content to leave it with him," was the reply.

"Has the American Federation of Labor any authority over the Central Labor Council of Spokane?"

"They are affiliated with us, but we have no authority over them. They have a right to do as they please as long as they obey the law. I can only say that this is a very unwise movement, a misdirected effort and I am not in sympathy with it."

Mr. Gompers was also shown the despatches stating that the federal investigation at Indianapolis into dynamiting cases would proceed in spite of the fact that the McNamaras had pleaded guilty, and was asked if he thought there was any possibility of officials of the American Federation of Labor being involved

"Let them go ahead. Let them go as high as they like," he exclaimed. "If there are other men above or below in this case, the federal investigation ought to disclose them. Let the federal investigation go on. If there was anybody behind these men, their identity ought to be known. Personally I cannot conceive of where they got their money to perpetrate their outrages. I cannot dream of who was behind them."

Mr. Gompers was found at a Broadway hotel, where he will make his headquarters until he leaves for Washington, probably Monday night, and plainly showed the effects of the strain

"I had had little sleep and practically nothing to eat all day," he said "In due time, when I have the facilities and the opportunity I may make a written statement, but I don't want to discuss the matter any more."

"It has been said that the McNamaras pleaded guilty to protect other persons," Mr Gompers was told

"I don't know anything about that I have received no communication from Los Angeles since the joint telegram from the McNamaras thanking me for the support of the American Federation of Labor. If there is anybody that needs to be protected, I don't know of it."

"Is the American Federation going to take any action in the matter? Will it make any investigation to find out where the money for the McNamaras expenses came from, or who was behind them?" the labor leader was asked.

"It is too early to state yet what we will do. Until we hold our meeting on Jan. 6 I am afraid the public will have to wait."

Must Punish, Says Daly.

Portland, Ore., Dec. 4.—William H. Daly, an official of the Federation of Labor, said on Saturday:

"As they are unionists, we ask only the same justice for the McNamaras now as we did when believed them innocent. If they are guilty, as is evident from their confessions, every laboring man wants the proper punishment meted out to them."

AGED CLERGYMAN DIES.

Rev. Canon Ellegood of Montreal In Harness to the Last.

Montreal, Dec. 4.—Rev. Canon Ellegood, rector of the Church of St. James the Apostle, one of the oldest clergymen in the Dominion, passed away at his residence at eight o'clock yesterday morning.

He had been in very feeble health for some time, and during the past few days the end had been expected at any minute.

Canon Ellegood's career was one of enthusiastic work in the ministry right up to the time of his last illness.

Born near Fredericton, N.B., March 1, 1824, he received his early education at King's College, where he graduated with the degree of B.A., in 1849. Upon his ordination, first as a deacon in 1848, and as a priest in the following year, he was appointed junior assistant at Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal.

His first charge was St. Ann's Chapel, Griffintown, and there he remained during the year of the immigrant ship fever and as a consequence suffered for years from the poisonous virus with which his system had become infected. A year later he aided in the fight against the pestilential outbreak of cholera, which followed the ship fever.

His church was burned to the ground shortly after, but was rebuilt through an appeal to the people of wealthier parishes and renamed St. Stephens.

In 1864 St James the Apostle Church was built, and he became the first rector, and has since remained with that church.

He was the oldest clergyman in the diocese of Montreal, and the only one left who saw the birth of its synod in 1859. He was also the oldest military chaplain in the British service, having been appointed chaplain of the Victoria Rifles when that regiment was organized over fifty years ago.

Fulfils His Vow.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Dec. 4.—The police believe the man who committed suicide by going over the American falls Saturday night was Hugh J. Adams, 30 years old, a farm hand who have been working near St. Catharines. The description of the suicide tallies with that of Adams in all but one particular. Adams had a moustache when he left St. Catharines for the falls, but the suicide was clean shaven.

About 7 o'clock Saturday night, Reservation Officers John Wilson and Arthur Alexander saw a man standing in the glare of the park electric lights on the river bank, a short distance above the falls, just outside the iron railing that guards the river. They shouted to him to come back, but he paid no attention. The man calmly waded into the rapids above the falls, and while the officers made futile efforts to rescue him, he was carried over the falls. All efforts to locate the body have been unsuccessful.

Chief Thomas Lyons yesterday afternoon received a telephone message from Chief Greene, St. Catharines, to the effect that Adams had left St. Catharines with the avowed intention of going over the falls.

Nurses Threatened.

Guelph, Dec. 4.—Misses Arkell and Ferguson, two nurses in training at the General Hospital, were rudely awakened about two o'clock Saturday morning by a man running an arm under their pillows, evidently feeling for valuables. One of them raised an outcry and was warned by the intruder to desist or she would suffer death.

With that the intruder made his way to a window by which he had entered, with the assistance of a ladder, and disappeared. Harry Jones, night watchman, saw the man escaping and notified the police, who were able to follow the tracks in the newly-fallen snow to Arthur street, where they arrested a man named James O'Connor, who occupies two rooms with his wife. He came here about a week ago from Detroit, he claims. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded. This is the second time in a couple of months that nurses have been similarly disturbed.

Rancher Ends Life.

Okotosk, Alberta, Dec. 4.—Edward W Melladow, a well-known rancher of Millarville, committed suicide yesterday morning in the Grand Central Hotel by blowing off the top of his head with a shotgun. He discharged both barrels and death was instantaneous. He had been acting strangely of late, and it is believed he was insane.

Canon of Worcester Dead.

London, Dec. 4.—Rev. Thomas T. Shore, canon of Worcester since 1891, and chaplain-in-ordinary to the King, died yesterday. He was born in Dublin in 1841. He was honorary chaplain to Queen Victoria in 1878, chaplain-in-ordinary to King Edward VII He was religious instructor to the daughters of King Edward.

REBELS IN NANKING

Imperial Forces Capitulate to Revolutionaries

MINISTERS DESERT YUAN

Nanking, Dec. 4.—The revolutionary forces took possession of the city on Saturday morning, after a parley with the Imperial Government forces, who were in occupation. At midday the white flag was displayed on Lion Fort, inside the walls to the northwest, indicating that the gunners had joined the revolution.

Gen. Li Yuen Heng, the revolutionary leader, who had captured Tiger Fort a few days ago, occupied Shaikwan, a town on the banks of the river outside the City of Nanking. Thereupon the warships under the command of Admiral Sah, which had hitherto been two miles down the river, cautiously approached and took up a position under the guns of Lion Hill Fort.

Gen. Lin, second in command of the revolutionary forces, took the Taiping gate and then arranged the terms of capitulation of the entire city. Later on the revolutionary troops entered and took possession of the telegraph office. White flags began to appear everywhere, and no fighting occurred when the revolutionaries entered the streets.

Bad For the Throne.

Pekin, Dec. 4.—Late developments are all unfavorable to the Imperialists, whose hopes rise and fall with every change. Yesterday they were dejected because Urga, the capital of Mongolia, which like Lhassa heretofore has been held by force, has now taken occasion to declare its independence and has expelled the Chinese officers.

Various reports reaching Pekin indicate that Manchuria, which up to the present has been only passively rebellious, is likely soon to become an active factor in the revolution. Gen. Chao Erhhsun, viceroy, reports that Japanese are assisting the revolutionaries, that they are importing dynamite for the rebels and even joining the rebel ranks.

The Chinese Foreign Board yesterday called attention to the arrest of four Japanese at Mukden on the charge of throwing bombs. The Chinese officials assert that one of the Japanese has confessed that general rising had been planned for Dec. 5. The Japanese legation, in answer to the protest of the Chinese Government, disclaimed any knowledge of these reports, but added that efforts would be made to prevent individual Japanese from breaking neutrality.

Continued resignations from the Government, including the Viceroy of Honan and the Finance Minister recently appointed to Yua Shi Kai's Cabinet, leave the Premier more than ever a one-man government.

The newspapers are beginning to voice the popular idea that Premier Yuan intends soon to declare himself regent. Evidently the Premier, not being able to bring the rebels to terms which would be acceptable to the Manchus, intends to do further fighting.

Clan Fighting Near Amoy.

Amoy, Dec. 4.—Clan fighting continues in the northwestern quarter of the city. A number of irresponsible bands of men representing themselves to be revolutionists are traversing the country and blackmailing the inhabitants of the villages.

A band of 300 ruffians armed with nondescript weapons have demanded enrollment at Amoy, but the revolutionary leaders have refused to accept them, and the men are now threatening to cause trouble.

Montreal Port Closes.

Montreal, Dec. 4.—With the sailing of the Braybead for Irish ports shortly after noon Saturday the season of navigation to this port finally closed. Dec. 3 is unusually late for the last sailing, it being some ten years since a boat left on so late a date, while as a rule the port is closed before end of November.

Montreal Station Master Dead.

Montreal, Dec. 4.—P. C. Caron, Grand Trunk station master here, died yesterday morning of Bright's disease. He had been ailing for some time. Mr. Caron had been in the employ of the railway for forty years, and had been station master for the last decade.

Surgeon's Spartan Spirit.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 4.—Dr. Louis S. Booth, 28 years old, an attending physician at a local hospital, was operated upon for appendicitis without taking an aesthetic. He was so placed upon the operating table that he was able to watch the operation from beginning to end, making suggestions as to how it should be done. A rapid recovery is expected.

Westmount Took Census.

Montreal, Dec. 4.—Discontented with the population with which their thriving suburb was credited by the federal census, the town councillors of Westmount Saturday conducted a census of their own. The final figures will be announced to-morrow, as in some cases the enumerators found no one at home.

Telegraph Service Affected.

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—The Department of the naval service has been advised by the National Radio Telegraph service at Berne that wireless messages to Italian coast points are accepted only at sender's risk and must not be written in code. This notice is issued on account of the conditions of war between Turkey and Italy.

Sailor's Death Accidental.

Cornwall, Dec. 4.—The inquest into the cause of the death of Robert Kehoe of Cleveland, Ohio, a sailor on the steamer Senator Derbyshire, who was killed at Lock 17 of the Cornwall Canal on Nov. 25, resulted in a verdict of accidental death. It was apparent that Kehoe had his choice of a rope ladder or a rope to climb the side of the steamer after releasing her from the snubbing posts and sailor-like chose the rope. Either his mitts or the rope or both were icy, and therefore it was easy for him to slip down between the boat and the lock wall, as the boat swung in. No blame was attributed to anyone connected with the steamer.

As none of Kehoe's relatives could be located, the remains were interred at Cornwall.

Shot In Fight Over Gun.

Smith's Falls, Dec. 4.—Two boys named Burroughs and McKeowne were struggling for possession of a rifle yesterday when it was accidentally discharged. The bullet entered the cheek of a boy named John Morgan, coming out at the eye, shattering the latter member. The injured boy is at a hospital in a precarious condition.

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Follow him! Don't let him out of your sight! Quick!"

Wrayson turned and sped down the avenue. When he reached the wall, he stood there and waited. Presently Duncan came crashing through the wood and vaulted the wall. Wrayson met him in the middle of the hard white road.

"We will walk back to the Lion d'Or together," he said calmly. "I have a few things to say to you!"

CHAPTER XXIX.

Monsieur Jules, of the Lion d'Or, was in a state of excitement bordering upon frenzy. Events were happening indeed with him, this placid August weather. First the occupancy of the chateau by the mysterious lady, and the subsequent edict of the steward against all strangers; then the coming of this tourist yesterday, who had gone for an evening stroll without paying his bill, and was now a prisoner of the law, Heaven only knew on what charge! Added to this—a matter of excitement enough surely—the giant Englishman, who had been his guest for nearly three weeks—a model guest, too—had departed at a minute's notice, though not, the saints be praised, without paying his bill. And now, though the hour was yet scarcely nine o'clock, a carriage with steaming horses was standing at his door, and the beautiful young English lady was herself inside his inn. He was indeed conducting her down the grey stone passage out on to the rose-bordered garden, which was the pride of his heart, and where Monsieur the remaining Englishman was smoking his morning cigarette.

She barely waited until Monsieur Jules had bowed himself out of hearing distance. She looked at Wrayson, at the table laid for one only, and at the empty garden.

"Where is he—your friend?" she demanded breathlessly.

"Gone," Wrayson answered. "I am sorry, but I did my best. He went away at daylight. I saw him off, but I could not keep him."

"Where to?" she asked. "You know that, at least."

He pointed towards the distant coast line.

"In that direction! That is all I know."

"He told you nothing before he went?" she asked eagerly.

"Nothing at all," he answered. "He refused to discuss what had happened. Sit down, Louise," he added firmly. "I want to talk to you."

He placed a chair for her under the trees. She sank into it a little wearily.

"A certain measure of ignorance," he said, "I am willing to put up with, but when you exhibit such extraordinary interest in another man, I really feel that my limit has been reached. Who is he, Louise? You must tell me, please!"

"I wish I could tell you," she answered. "I wish I could say that I knew. Half the night the three of us have talked, and wondered. I have heard plenty of theories as to a second life on some imaginary planet, but I never heard of the dead who lived again here, in this world!"

He looked puzzled.

"Do you mean," he asked, "that he was like someone whom you believed to be dead?"

She was silent for a moment. The sun was hot even where they sat, but he fancied that he saw her shiver. She looked into his face, and something of the terror of the night before was in her eyes.

"To us," she said slowly, "to Madame de Melbain, and to me, he was a ghost, an actual apparition. He spoke to us with a voice of one whom we know to be dead. He came to us, in his form."

Wrayson looked across at her with a quiet smile.

"There was nothing of the ghost about Duncan!" he remarked. "I should consider him a remarkably substantial person. Don't you think that we were all a little overwrought last night? A strong likeness and a little imagination will often work wonders."

"If it was a likeness only," she said, "why did he leave us so abruptly why has he left this place at a moment's notice to avoid us?"

Wrayson was silent for a few seconds.

"Look here," he said, "this is a matter of commonsense after all. If you were not deceived by a likeness, it was the man himself! That goes without saying. What seasons had you for supposing that he was dead?"

"The newspapers, the War Office, even the return of his effects."

"From where?" Wrayson asked.

"From South Africa. He was shot through the lungs in Natal!"

"Men have turned up before, after having been reported dead," he remarked sententiously.

"But he was in the Army," she replied. "Don't you see that if he was alive now, he would be a deserter. He has never rejoined. He was certified as having died in the hospital at Ladysmith!"

Wrayson looked steadily into her agitated face.

"Supposing," he said, "that he turned out to be the man whom you have in your mind, what is he to you?"

"My brother," she answered simply.

Wrayson's first impulse was of surprise. Then he drew a long breath of relief. He looked back upon his long hours of anxiety, and cursed himself for a fool.

"What an idiot I have been!" he declared. "Of course, I know that you lost a brother in South Africa. But—but what about Madame de Melbain?"

"Madame de Melbain and my brother, were friends," she said quietly. "There were obstacles or they would have been more than friends."

Wrayson nodded.

"Now supposing," he said, "that by some miracle, your brother still lived, that this was he, is there any reason why he should avoid you both?"

She thought for a moment.

"Yes!" she said slowly, "there is."

"I suppose," he continued tentatively, "you couldn't tell me all about it?"

"I couldn't," she answered. "It isn't my secret."

Wrayson looked for a moment away from her, across the valley with its flower spangled meadows, parted by that sinuous poplar-fringed line of silver, the lazy slow-flowing river stealing through the quiet land to the sea. The full summer heat was scarcely yet in the air, but already a faint blue haze was rising from the lowlands. Up to the plateau where they were sitting, a slight breeze stirred amongst the many trees; Monsieur Jules had indeed some ground for his pride in this tiny sylvan paradise.

"I think," he said, "that for one day we will forget all this tangle of secrets and unaccountable doings. What do you say, Louise?" he whispered, taking her unresisting hand into his. "May I tell Monsieur Jules to serve breakfast for two in the arbour there?"

She laughed softly into his face. There was the look in her eyes which he loved to see, half wistful, half content, almost happy.

"But you are never satisfied," she declared. "If I give you a day, a whole precious day out of my valuable life——"

"They belong to me, all of them," he declared, bending over her till his lips touched her cheek. "Some day I am very sure that I shall take them all into my charge."

She disengaged herself from his embrace with a sudden start. Wrayson turned his head. Within a yard or two of them Madame de Melbain had paused in the centre of the little plot of grass. She was looking at them from underneath her lace parasol, with faintly uplifted eyebrows and the dawn of a smile upon her beautiful lips. Louise sprang to her feet, and Wrayson followed her example. Madame de Melbain lowered her parasol as though to shut out the sight of the two.

"May I come on?" she asked. "I want to speak to Louise, although I am afraid I am shockingly de trop."

Wrayson had an idea, and acted upon it promptly.

"Madame de Melbain," he said, "I believe that you have some influence with Louise. I am sure that you are one of those who sympathise with the unfortunate. Can't I bespeak your good offices?"

She lowered her parasol to the ground, and leaned a little forward upon it. Her eyes were fixed steadily upon Wrayson.

"Go on," she said briefly.

"I love Louise," Wrayson said, "and I believe she cares for me. Nevertheless, she refuses to marry me, and will give no intelligible reason. My first meeting with her was of an extraordinary nature. I assisted her to leave a house in which a murder had been committed, since which time I think we have both run a risk of trouble with the authorities. Louise lives always in the shadow of some mystery and when I who surely have the right to know her secrets, beg for her confidence, she refuses it."

"And what is it that you wish me to do?" Madame de Melbain asked softly.

"To use your influence with Louise," Wrayson pleaded. "Let her give me her confidence, and let her accept from me the shelter of my name."

Madame de Melbain was silent for several moments. She seemed to be thinking. Louise's face was expressionless. She had made one attempt to check Wrayson, but recognizing its futility she had at once abandoned it. From below in the valley came the faint whirr of the reaping machines, from the rose garden a murmur of bees. But between the two women and the man there was silence—silence which lasted so long that Monsieur Jules, who was watching from a window, called softly upon all the saints of his acquaintance to explain to him of what nature was this mystery, which seemed to be developing, as it were, under his own surveillance.

At last Madame de Melbain appeared to come to a decision. She moved slowly forward, until she stood within a few feet of him. Then she raised her eyes to his and looked him long and earnestly in the face.

"You look," she said, half under her breath, "like a man who might be trusted. I will trust you. I will be kinder to you than Louise, for I will tell you all that you want to know. But when I have told you, you will have in your keeping the honour of an unfortunate woman whose name alone is great."

Wrayson looked her for a moment in the eyes. Then he bowed low.

"Madame," he said, "that trust will be to me my most sacred possession."

She smiled at him faintly, nodding her head as though to keep pace with her thoughts.

"I believe you, Mr. Wrayson," she said. "Yes, I believe you! Let me tell you this, then. I count it amongst my misfortunes that my own troubles have become in so large a manner the troubles of my friends. You will appreciate that the more, perhaps, when I tell you that Madame de Melbain is not the name by which I am generally known. I am that unfortunate woman, the Queen of Mexonia!"

CHAPTER XXX.

Wrayson, who had been prepared for something surprising, was yet startled out of his composure. The affairs of the unhappy Royal House of Mexonia were the property of the world. He half rose to his feet, but Madame de Melbain instantly waved him back again.

"My friends," she said, "deem it advisable that my whereabouts should not be known. I certainly am very anxious that my incognita should be preserved."

She paused, and Wrayson without hesitation, answered her unspoken question. Unconsciously, too, he found himself using the same manner of address as the others.

"Madame," he said, "whatever you choose to tell me will be sacred."

She bowed her head slightly.

"I am going to tell you a good deal," she said, glancing across at Louise.

Louise opened her lips as though about to intervene. Madame de Melbain continued, however, without a break.

"I am going to tell you more than may seem necessary," she said, "because I believe that I am one of those unfortunate persons whose evil lot it is to bring unhappiness upon their friends. So far as I can avoid this, Mr. Wrayson, I mean to. Further—it is possible that I may ask you—presently—to render me a service."

Wrayson bowed low. He felt that she was already well aware of his willingness.

"First, then, let me tell you," she continued, leaning back in her chair, and looking away across the valley with eyes whose light was wholly reminiscent, "that we three were schoolgirls together, Louise, Amy—whom you know better, perhaps, as the Baroness de Sturm—and myself. We were at a convent near Brussels. There were not many pupils, and we three were friends.

"We had a great deal of liberty—more liberty, perhaps, than our friends would have approved of. We worked, it is true, in the mornings, but in the afternoons we rode or played tennis in the Bois. It was there that I met Prince Frederick, who afterwards became my husband.

"I was only sixteen years old, and just as silly, I suppose, as a girl brought up was certain to be. I was very much flattered by Prince Frederick's attentions, and quite ready to respond to them. My own family was noble, and the match was not considered a particularly unequal one, for though Frederick was of the Royal House, he was a long way from the succession. Still, there was a good deal of trouble when a messenger from Frederick went to my father. He declared that I was altogether too young; my mother, on the other hand, was just as anxious to conclude the match. Eventually, it was arranged that the betrothal should take place in six months—and Frederick went back to Mexonia."

Madame de Melbain paused for a moment. Wrayson felt, from her slightly altered attitude and a significant lowering of her voice, that she was reaching the part of her narrative which she found the most difficult.

"We girls," she continued, "went back to school, and just at that time Louise's brother came over to Brussels. I think that I have already told you that the supervision over us was far from strict. There was nothing to prevent Captain Fitzmaurice being a good deal with us. We had picnics, tennis parties, rides! Long before the six months were up I understood how foolish I had been. I wrote to Prince Frederick and begged him to release me from our uncompleted engagement. His answer was to appear in person. He made a scene. My mother and father were now wholly on his side. Within a few weeks he had lost both a cousin and a brother. His succession to the throne was almost a certainty. His own people were just as anxious to have him married. I did not know why then, but I found out later on. They had their way. I believe that things are different in an English home. In mine, I can assure you that I never had any chance. I entered upon my married life without the least possibility of happiness. Needless to say, I never realized any! For the last four years my husband has been trying for a divorce! Very soon it is possible that he will succeed."

Wrayson leaned a little towards her.

"Is it permitted, Madame, to ask a question?"

"Why not?"

"You have fought against this divorce, you and your friends, so zealously. Yet your life has been unhappy. Release could scarcely have been anything but a relief to you!"

Madame de Melbain raised her head slightly. Her brows were a little contracted. From her eyes there flashed the silent fire of a Queen's disdain.

"Release! Yes, I would welcome that! If it were death it would be welcome! But divorce—he to divorce me, he, whose brutality and infidelities are the scandal of every Court in Europe! No! A divorce I never shall accept. Separation I have insisted upon."

Wrayson hesitated for a moment.

"May I be pardoned," he said, "if I repeat to you what I saw in print lately—in a famous English paper? They spoke of this divorce case which has lasted so long—they spoke of it as about to be finally decided. There was some fresh evidence about to be produced, a special court was to be held."

Madame de Melbain turned, if possible, a shade paler.

"Yes!" she said slowly, "I have heard of that. We have all heard of that. I want to tell you, Mr. Wrayson, what that fresh evidence consists of."

Wrayson bowed and waited. Somehow he felt that he was on the eve of a great discovery.

"Both before my marriage and afterwards," Madame de Melbain said quietly, "I wrote to—Captain Fitzmaurice. I was always impulsive—when I was younger, and my letters, especially one written on the eve of my marriage, would no doubt decide the case against me. Captain Fitzmaurice was killed—in Natal, but in a mysterious way news has reached me of the letters since his death."

Crippled With Sore Back

Kidneys Were Badly Diseased and She Didn't Know It

Was Completely Cured by Less Than Three Boxes of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Women are very often deceived and mistaken in regard ot kidney disease. The pains in the back are attributed to other derangements, and kidney disease is allowed to run on and on until beyond the reach of medical science.

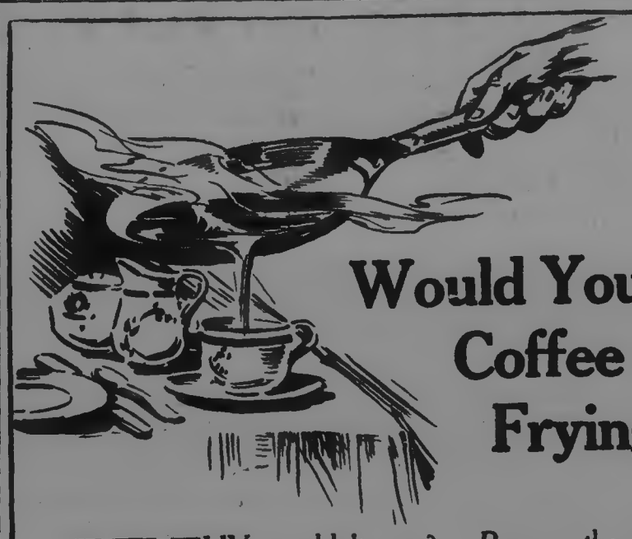
There is needless suffering, and life itself is risked, because backache is not recognized as the most marked symptom of kidney disease.

There is no treatment which so quickly relieves and cures kidney pains in the back as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. As proof of this read Mrs. Patterson's letter:

Mrs. Richard Patterson, Haldimand, Gaspe Co., Que., writes: "I will gladly say that I was cured of kidney trouble by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. When I began using this medicine I was crippled with sore back and did not know what was the trouble. In looking over Dr. Chase's Almanac I saw Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills advertised and decided to try them.

"I had not used two boxes before my back was all right, and before I had completed the third box was entirely cured. There has been no return of the old kidney trouble, and I therefore believe the cure to be permanent."

One pill a dose, 25c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.



Would You Make Coffee in a Frying Pan?

WHY wouldn't you? Because the best part of coffee is the aroma, and if you made your coffee in a frying pan you would let most of it out. Same with rolled oats.

If the miller dries them in open pans, in the ordinary way, much of the aroma and flavor of the oats escape with the moisture.

Tillson's Oats are dried in pans enclosed in kilns. When they reach your table, you will find they retain all the appetizing aroma and delicious flavor which nature gave the oats.

Tillson's Oats are rolled the thinnest and cook thoroughly in 15 minutes.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

THE HARVEST RIPE FOR GARNERING

Fruitage of This Age Soon to Be Harvested—Not to Convert the Heathen.

Brooklyn, Dec. 3d.—The public was not made aware of Pastor Russell's presence in our city to-day. No advertisements were given forth because the Academy of Music was not obtainable, and the Tabernacle would not accommodate the crowds. As it was, however, the Tabernacle was crowded. His text was, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." (Jeremiah viii, 20.)

The Pastor seemed specially to enjoy the semi-privacy of this meeting with the Tabernacle congregation. As is generally known he is about to start on a tour of the world in company with a Committee of six gentlemen of affairs of which he is the chosen Chairman. The Committee was appointed some months ago by the International Bible Students Association to visit heathen lands, to investigate conditions there and to report to the Association and to the public their findings along the following lines:

(1) Are the Foreign Missions being conducted along Christian business lines?

(2) To what extent are the methods used successful in reaching the heathen peoples and in bringing them to Christianity?

(3) What are the teachings, what the inducements to accept Christianity and how enduring are the results?

(4) What is the attitude of Heathendom to the missionaries and toward Christianity and what are the prospects for Foreign Missions becoming self-sustaining?

(5) What, if any, changes could be made in teaching or in financial administration to make the foreign missionary work more successful in the future?

(6) What hope is there for the conversion of the world in this generation as proposed by the Laymen's Missionary Movement with its thirty-million-dollar endowment?

(7) To what extent do the monies donated benefit the heathen and could any improvement along this line be suggested?

The personnel of this Committee is interesting. They are all deeply interested in Christian work, both at home and abroad. They are Christian men of the highest type, and have long been contributors to the spread of the Gospel. They are as follows: Pastor Russell, President; Prof. F. H. Robison, Secretary; Gen. W. P. Hall, U. S. A.; Mr. J. T. D Pyles, Washington, D.C., Merchant; Mr. E. W. V. Kuhn, Merchant, Toledo, Ohio; Dr. L. W. Jones, Chicago, Illinois, and Mr. R. B. Maxwell, Merchant, Mansfield, Ohio.

The report of this committee will be awaited with great interest by many.

Pastor Russell will visit classes of Bible Students en route and will address the public next Sunday in Los Angeles, California. Arrangements are perfected whereby we will be in touch with him throughout his journey. His addresses will be reported from Japan, China, Manila, Travancore, Madras, Calcutta, Cairo and Corinth.

Discussing his text the Pastor declared that as there was a harvest time, a reaping time, in the end of the Jewish Age, so also there is to be a harvesting in the end of this Gospel Age. The fruitage of this Age will be gathered into the heavenly "garner," by the glorious change of the First Resurrection. The Lord's words were, "The harvest is the end of the Age." By mistranslation His words were rendered, "The harvest is the end of the world," and thus many have been misled into a fear that the second coming of Jesus will mean the end of all things, for all except the saintly few.

Rather we should understand that as the Jewish Age ended with a harvest, and its ripe fruitage was gathered into the "garner," so the garnering of the Church, in the close of this Age, will mean the inauguration of the New Dispensation of Messiah's Kingdom—a New Age of blessing to the world in general—to all the families of the earth. The glorified Church, in association with her Lord and Redeemer, will reign for a thousand years, as kings and priests unto God and unto Christ, for the world's uplifting out of sin and death conditions.

The Pastor reminded his hearers that he believes the Bible to teach that we are now in the Harvest time of this Age. Consequently none should misunderstand the visit to heathen lands to imply any expectation on his part that the heathens must be converted before this Age will end. That such would be an impossibility is shown by the Government statistics to the effect that the numbers of heathen have doubled during the past century.

What he does expect is, that as there are a few of God's "very elect" in all denominations of Christendom, now to be garnered, so also there are a few saintly ones amongst the heathen who have accepted Christ—including some of the missionaries. The "harvest" must cover as wide an area as did the sowing of the Gospel seed. To some extent the message of the Kingdom has been preached amongst all nations. The Bible is the special proclamation of Messiah's Kingdom as the hope of the world, and contains the "call" of the Church to joint-heirship with her Lord in that Kingdom, which will bless the world.

The essence of this Kingdom message, however, has been somewhat confused by reason of the many false notions set forth in our numerous false creeds of the past. In his discourses in heathen lands the Pastor intends to lay stress upon the Kingdom feature of the Gospel message. While it will be his privilege to proclaim the Kingdom message, he recognizes that only those who have the "ear to hear" will be able to appreciate and receive it. His message is one of the Bible, to which all Christians may rally, if they are rid of denominational ties: "The Church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven," and whose Harvest time has come, are the Lord's, wholly irrespective of the denominations with which they are affiliated.

The text points out a lesson. Not all who have professed to be followers of Christ will be amongst the blessed ones of the "harvest," who are to be transported by the First Resurrection to glory, honor and immortality as their reward. The words of Jesus here cited in corroboration of this are: "Many shall say unto Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not taught many, and in Thy name cast out devils, and done many wonderful works?" Many who thus hope will be disappointed—will be shut out of the Kingdom class.

Another of the Redeemer's parables, the Pastor said, pictures the consecrated saints of God in this "harvest" time as "virgins." But some were wise and some foolish. The masses of mankind, yea, the masses of Christendom, are omitted from this parabolic picture. Only the "virgin" class is dealt with at all, and it is divided into two parts, and only the wise, the faithful, "more than conquerors," will have the honor of entering into the wedding with the Bridegroom and becoming "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." Then the door will be shut. No more will ever enter that door. No more will ever be added to the Bride company—the number of the "elect" will have been completed.

The parable shows that, later on, the "foolish virgins" pass through great tribulation and obtain the oil and the light which they should have had before. But it will then be too late to become of the Bride. They will knock, saying, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but the Bridegroom will declare, "I do not recognize you," as members of My Bride. However, the Scriptures show us that these "foolish virgins," passings through a great time of tribulation, will be called to "the marriage supper of the Lamb" and be present before the great King as the virgins, the Bride's companions, and subordinate helpers.—Psalm xl, 13-15.

One lesson, said the Pastor, is that it is not sufficient that we say, Lord, Lord—that we publicly proclaim ourselves Christians—nor is it sufficient that we be engaged in good works, casting out demons and healing the sick and teaching the people. These things in their way are good, but God has His own test as respects those who shall be accepted as members of "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." Obedience to the Word and Spirit of the Lord, loyalty to the Master and to all His followers, faithfulness to His leadings, through evil report and through good report, will be required.

The greatest work of which any of Christ's followers are capable is the conquering of self—the development of the fruits and graces of the Holy Spirit. Our privileges of being co-laborers with the Master in the proclamation of His Message is not granted because He needs us, but because we need the opportunities thus afforded for the development of His character-likeness in our hearts.

Our Lord implies a great number of nominal followers devoid of His Spirit, who in the end of this Age would not be bringing forth the fruitage that He desires, who would not be members of His called and chosen and faithful class, though outwardly, nominally, all of these. He points down to our day, saying, "in that day"—in the closing of this Age, in the testing time, in the time when He shall come to make up His jewels and to glorify them as His Bride, His members, His associates in the Kingdom. Many at that time—in our day—will profess that they know the Lord, that they are prophets or teachers, that they are casting out devils, opposing sin and multitudinous forms of evil, and that they are carrying on mighty works, benevolent institutions, colleges, seminaries, etc., in His name. The Revised Version gives, "by Thy name," intimating that the name of Christ is used rather as a charm, to conjure by.

But the testing time is near. The Lord will inquire respecting the fruit of these. He will not be deceived; yea, He will expose the bad fruit, that all may see that His judgment is just. It will be manifest that neglect of His Word has led to degeneracy, decay—that the suckers of worldly ambition, pride, wealth, show, etc., have been cultivated, notwithstanding all of the trying experiences which might have served to prune these. It will be shown that many of the prophets of Babylon are false prophets, whose teachings have misguided the people and, instead of blessing, have done injury instead of enlightening, have blinded. It will be manifested that many of them are ravening wolves in sheep's clothing, hungry with ambition for fame and prominence and honor of men, and willing to barter the interests of the "flock" for their personal aggrandizement.

It will be shown that much of this conjuring in the name of Jesus has been merely a cloak, under which, deceiving and being deceived, sectarian fruitage, and not the love, joy, peace and holy Spirit, have been cultivated. "The day will declare it," will show it, will manifest it. The whole world shall be witness eventually that God's name was dishonored, and His Word misrepresented, because false teachers were looking every one to gain from his own quarter—his own denomination.—Isaiah lvi, 11.

The Lord never knew the sects—He never recognized them. He never authorized them; they are of men, and for men, not of the Lord nor for the Lord's glory. Claiming that all there is of Christianity is due to themselves they are proud and boastful and realize not that the Lord's true cause would have flourished far better without them, in the simplicity of the early Church—one in redemption through the precious blood and in consecration to the Redeemer. The gathering out of the Bride class and the leaving of the remainder will be saying in effect, "I never knew you, never recognized you, never authorized you," and these unauthorized sects will go down in the great "time of trouble."

We are glad, however, that the thousands and millions who have been deceived by these false systems will have a glorious opportunity during the incoming Age to come to a knowledge of the Truth and a right understanding of the character of God as revealed in the fulfillment of His gracious plan. Thus many who miss the great "prize" may still have a glorious opportunity for the lesser prize of God in restitution, etc.

We believe that there are active workers in the sectarian systems called "Babylon" who will yet be reached by the knowledge of the Truth and delivered. Our Lord intimates this, saying, "Come out of her, my people." Some of His people evidently are in Babylon, and it is our present mission in the name of the Lord to call these out—through the presentation of "Present Truth," which will show to all who are truly the Lord's where they stand, and their duty. Others of the active workers in the iniquitous systems, which are counterfeits of the true, misrepresenters of God's Message and hinders and endeavors of the Lord's people, because not at heart loyal to Him, will not come out of Babylon, and therefore will share in the condemnation coming upon her. They will go into the great time of trouble, and for a season at least be cut off from all fellowship with the Lord. These workers of iniquity will have their hands full of the trouble which they have helped to bring upon the world of mankind by their misrepresentations of the Divine character and Plan. It will be a terrible chastisement, and our hope for them is that "when the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, all the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isaiah xxvi, 9.

The picture or parable of one house built upon the rock and the other house built upon the sand refers not to the Church and the world, but to two parties in the Church. None are in the parable except "those who hear these sayings of Mine." The world hears not our Lord's message at all. As the Apostle declares, the world is both deaf and blind to spiritual things. Those who hearken to and appreciate the Lord's sayings represent at least a nominal Church, and amongst those of the nominal Church are some who are obedient to the Lord's Word, while others are disobedient. The obedient are built upon the rock, the disobedient upon the sand.

Those who build upon the rock our Lord explains to be such as not only hear His message, but are obedient thereto to the extent of their ability. Let us remember the words to which He refers—they are the message of the Sermon on the Mount, which show the things which are blessed of God in contradistinction to the things which would not have His approval.

Those who hear the Master's words and say, "Yea, Lord," but who do not put His teachings into practice, are not built properly upon the rock of Truth, upon Christ. They are building their hope, their faith, their trust, upon a foundation which will not stand. When the time of trouble comes upon such their hopes will be undermined, their faith will collapse.

We thank God that although many of the nominal professors of Christianity and teachers and philanthropists will not be accepted amongst the elect Bride class, nevertheless they are far too good, too noble to merit eternal torture. Nay, the Lord will not even consign them to the Second Death, to annihilation. Rather, He will provide for them, under Messiah's Kingdom, a gracious opportunity of attaining and demonstrating a still higher type of love and loyalty than they have yet experienced or manifested. In proportion as any shall even then faithfully use the great privilege accorded him, his ultimate perfection and salvation will be assured.

Strange Punishment.

Had Boils On Neck and Arms.

Had Them Lanced But, Got No Relief Until He Used

Burdock Blood Bitters.

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and for you to get rid of them it is absolutely necessary to put the blood into good condition. For this purpose there is no remedy that can compare with Burdock Blood Bitters. This preparation has been on the market for about 35 years, and has a reputation unequalled by any other for the making of pure, rich, red blood. Mr. H. J. Batten, Stratford, Ont., writes:—"I have been troubled for several weeks with boils on my neck and arms. I had them lanced by the doctor, but as soon as one went others came. I tried all kinds of so called remedies, but could get no relief till I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I am pleased to say I am now quite free from those most painful things, and feel much better in every respect.

"My boy, of nine years, had a rash come over his back and legs, so we gave him a few doses and now he is all right again."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

PROPHET OF THE ALL-ELECTRIC AGE

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

America Soon Will See the Realization of the Dream of Romancers, According to Mr. S. Z. de Ferranti, the British Authority

IMAGINATIVE seers from the days of Edward Bellamy down to the present have pictured in spectacular terms the climax of our electric civilization—the era when the electric current shall perform for mankind every service for which we now rely on divers forms of muscular and mechanical dynamics. Painted in glowing colors on the canvas of the future, the material millennium predicted by the writers of fiction has inspired the dreams of visionaries and the ridicule of "practical" men. And not even the most daring of the romanticists has ventured to fix the date of the coming electric age as within the probable lifetime of any one now on earth.

Now science comes to the front and declares that the electric era—the time when electricity alone shall turn our wheels, light our houses, cook our meals, heat our dwellings, refrigerate our food supplies, perform the thousand duties already known to be possible when cheap enough power is obtainable, and incidentally grow our crops and regulate our climate—this era, the "all-electric age," instead of being a dream of the distant and undefined future, is actually upon us.

To-morrow—next year—certainly within ten years, declares the foremost of British electrical scientists and engineers, science will have pointed the way—will have made a practical possibility of the visions of Bellamy and Wells. All that will remain then to be done will be to find the money with which to put the discoveries of science into effect, and capital is never slow to follow where science leads. Men and women now in middle age may yet see the physical Utopia of the romancers as an actual existing condition.

That those things are certainties of the near future and that America is to play a leading part in their accomplishment is the substance of a remarkable interview which I had with Mr. S. Z. de Ferranti, president of the British Institution of Electrical Engineers, just as he had completed his recent tour of the United States—his first visit, by the way, to the American continent. Fresh from his inspection of the progress of electrical engineering in this country, Mr. Ferranti—he drops the "de" from his name in ordinary usage—was full of enthusiasm over American hospitality, American inventive genius, American developments in electrical application and the eager receptivity of the American people toward new methods and new ideas.

And wherever he went he found American electrical engineers and scientists equally enthusiastic over his own charming personality and intellectual grasp. In the electrical world his name has been familiar to every student for nearly a quarter of a century as that of one of the great pioneers in electrical science. To most American engineers this was the first opportunity of meeting him face to face, and his four weeks of travel from city to city, in which he visited every important centre from the Atlantic coast to Chicago, was a series of luncheons, banquets and receptions to which invitations were eagerly sought by those whose names stand highest on the rolls of American achievement.

Tall, slender and swarthy, Mr. Ferranti belies the typical Briton both in appearance and manner, as well he may. His paternal ancestry is that of an ancient Italian family that includes in its lineage two Doges of old Venice and several Bolognese noblemen, with a strain of Flemish blood in later generations. On his mother's side—and this may account for some of his mental as well as physical characteristics—there is an American strain, his maternal grandmother having been a native of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., of Dutch descent. Born in England, he distinguished himself at a very early age as a leader in the new science of electricity. His greatest pioneer work, by which his name became known to scientists the world over, was begun in 1888, when he conceived the idea of constructing a great electric power station, with generating units greater than any that had theretofore been attempted, to supply electric current to the city of London. At that time American engineers, leaders in electrical science, were content to work at pressures of two hundred volts.

Young Ferranti planned to handle the current at a ten thousand volt pressure. Older men of science declared him crazy. No machinery or apparatus had ever been built that would accomplish his purpose, and no one could tell, they said, whether it would work or not. They were of the opinion that it would not. Others accused him of dishonesty in attempting to obtain money with which to carry out what they regarded as a chimerical project. But, audacious as his scheme undoubtedly was, he got the necessary capital interested, and it worked! To-day the great Deptford power station, sending its ten thousand volt current through the identical mains which were originally laid, stands as a monument to the young engineer's genius and courage, for he not only had to convince others that the project was practical, but to design and create every piece of machinery and apparatus used. And even now, after a quarter of a century of higher voltages are in practice carried underground anywhere in the world.

So brief is the history of electrical development that the man who thus pointed the way in the very earliest days of the science is still a young man as men of affairs go. There may be a strand or two of gray in his flowing mustache, a speck of silver about the temples, but his step is the jaunty tread of youth, his manner that of an enthusiastic boy and his imagination and keenness of perception both undimmed by the lapse of years. In his speech he is as frank and unreserved, as facile and as emphatic as any American.

"What have I seen in America that interested me? Everything," he exclaimed, in reply to my first question.

"Your hospitality — it is bound" — felt as though I had just come home. Every been me kind.

"Surprises? I must confess that I have not been greatly surprised, for I was prepared for everything I saw. I have never been in America before, although I have booked passage three different times. But I have been for years a close reader of the American technical press—I get the American editions of the scientific journals instead of the English—and I know just what your engineers were up to. What I have seen has merely confirmed my previous impressions."

"And those were"——I began.

"Those were that this is a tremendous country, inhabited by most interesting and progressive people, and that what you have already done in the way of electrical development proves that America is to take a leading part in bringing about what I have termed the 'all-electric age.'

Conservation of Coal.

"What do I mean by that? I mean the time that is approaching when every pound of coal that is burned will be turned into electricity; when every drop of water that is utilized for power purposes will be converted into current; when electricity will be the only means used for all the things that are now done by the direct burning of coal, by gas and by all other means of obtaining power; when the electric current will be so cheap that the thousand new applications of it to every variety of mechanical, industrial, commercial and domestic uses which are now only possible as laboratory experiments will be within the reach of every one; when the means of applying electricity to these uses will be so simple that every one can operate it—in short, the time when electricity shall have supplanted all other forms for the transmission of energy and shall have brought new uses for energy into the rule of our everyday affairs."

"What are the things that remain to be done before this is accomplished?" I asked.

"Better and more efficient means of utilizing the heat units in coal, cheaper and more efficient methods of transmitting the electric current, higher efficiency and greater simplicity in the apparatus for the utilization of the current—these three, or any of them, will bring it about."

"It is the general impression," I suggested, "that the highest future developments in electrical lines are to come through the utilization of water power."

"In the long run that may be," replied Mr. Ferranti, "but in my judgment we shall reach the all-electric age by another route—the utilization of coal on a more economical and efficient basis than at present. It is cheaper to-day to carry the necessary coal to the point where power is to be developed than to transmit the electric current. Your city of Syracuse is about one hundred and fifty miles from Niagara Falls and about one hundred and fifty miles from the coal fields. It is cheaper to produce power in Syracuse from coal than to send power to Syracuse from Niagara Falls by methods now known.

"Eventually the problem of cheaper transmission over long distances will be solved by better conductors and less expensive installations, but at present the capital charge—the cost of maintenance and the depreciation account—on long distance transmission lines is so much heavier than the cost of operating coal trains on railroads that the latter is the cheaper method of transmitting power, and the present trend of research indicates the earlier solution of the coal problem than of the problem of distributing water generated electricity cheaply to any considerable distance from its point of origin."

"We are not to see the elevated and subway trains of New York operated by Niagara power, then?" I asked.

"Not for many years, if at all," replied Mr. Ferranti. "I do not mean that the power of Niagara is not capable of much wider use than at present. I hope it will be used much more extensively than now. I visited Niagara, and I must confess that the sentiment it inspired in me was one of sadness. When I saw the possibilities of that tremendous store of free power—realized the incalculable energy that is hourly going to waste over the brink of the cataract, pictured to myself the benefit to mankind if only this could all be utilized—I was impressed with the folly, as it seemed to me, the almost incredible failure to grasp a great opportunity for the advancement of human progress, that inspired the restrictions placed upon the utilization of the waters of Niagara. For the benefit of a handful of tourists, through what seems to me a strained sentimentality that is altogether at variance with my conception of the practical American character, the American and Canadian governments have thrown away and are throwing away daily untold wealth that would be a great addition to the assets of the countries.

"Even if it be necessary to preserve the beauty of that beautiful scene, the engineer and the artist, working together, could still devise means of taking many millions more horse power from the waters and yet preserve all that is beautiful and impressive about the cataract. I am sure that in time the American people will see this question in this light, and that the power utilized at Niagara will be increased enormously.

"But it is not along the line of water power development, but rather along the line of more efficient use of coal, that science is now pointing the way to the early realization of the all-electric age.

"You in America are nearer to it than we are in England. Over there only about one per cent of the coal mined is transformed into electric by. In this country you must be using at least two per cent of your coal for electric current. Your people are more ready to adopt new ideas and new methods—you have no such vis inertiæ to overcome as we have in England. In England, however, we have perhaps gone a little further than you have in pointing the way to obtaining all the possible value from the coal.

"At present only about ten per cent of the heat units in a ton of coal are utilized when it is turned into electricity in the most modern generating stations. The other ninety per cent is wasted. The all-electric age will come when we have found how to utilize at least twenty-five per cent of the possible power of coal, and to make use of the by-products which are now entirely wasted. Along these lines some of the best minds in the world of science are working. These researches are already giving promise of results sooner than the world expects them."

"Will this increased utilization of coal be through improved furnaces or by other means?" I asked.

"More probably through the conversion of the coal into producer gas and the use of the gas either for combustion under steam boilers or in gas engines," was the reply. "The gas engine and the gas producer are attracting the attention of experimental engineers everywhere. Producer gas, either produced at the mine and piped to the point of utilization or converted at the mine into electric current, or produced from coal which has been transported to the power plant, seems likely to give in the near future not only the twenty-five per cent of the coal's energy that I have mentioned, but also to be produced by means that will enable the valuable by-products to be saved.

"What I anticipate is the establishment of electrical zones, with central power stations — water power where that is available, coal where it is not. The areas of these zones will be determined by economic conditions and the development of means of power transmission. Where coal is the source of power the by-product will be saved and materially reduce the cost of power production."

"And these by-products are?"

"The most important is fixed nitrogen," replied Mr. Ferranti, "and in the all-electric age the nitrogen will be taken from the coal without detracting from the power producing value of the fuel and converted into fertilizer for the restoration of our impoverished soils. From a ton of coal fixed nitrogen can be obtained that will be equivalent to one hundred pounds of sulphate of ammonia, which is worth about $60 a ton. There is no other ingredient so necessary to the conservation of the soil for agriculture as is nitrogen. The problem of restoring the soil is more acute in England than it is in America, but even in this country, in the Eastern sections, your soils are already exhausted in many sections. With the improved scientific processes for the utilization of coal your farms will be restored to their original fertility and kept fertilized at the minimum of cost, while it has already been demonstrated that nitrogen can be successfully and commercially extracted from the air whenever electric current can be produced cheaply enough. The other by-products of coal, such as tar and oils, which have no fuel value, probably will pay the cost of extracting the nitrogen, so that the commercial cost of the coal will be much less than it is now.

"With cheap electric power other important agricultural advantages will be gained. It is well known that fruits and vegetables grown under glass develop much more fully and rapidly if exposed to electric light. The time may come when the larger part of our food will thus be grown, on soil fertilized by the by-product of the coal or nitrogen electrically extracted from the air."

"When the all-electric age arrives what shall we see?"

"First, a great extension of the use of electric light. America now leads the world in its use of electricity for lighting purposes, and it is fair to assume that it will continue to lead when current becomes so cheap that no other form of lighting is economical in comparison. Then we shall also see all cooking done by electricity. Much is done to-day, even at the high prices which are necessarily charged for the electric current. In the all-electric age there will be no other method of cooking in general use. With these two advances in effect there will come a great reduction of the fire risk.

"Electricity is already the most convenient means of power. In the all-electric age it will also be the cheapest, and therefore the only power used for all machinery. To-day it is the only power used for urban railroads. In the all-electric age the main line roads also will be operated by electricity.

"In the various manufacturing industries depending upon heat, such as the manufacture of pig iron, science has already demonstrated that it is only necessary to have electricity cheap enough to produce better results than are now obtained by present processes. Electricity is already extensively used in steel making; in the all-electric age it will supersede all other methods.

"I do not need to mention the immense variety of electro-chemical processes that would be carried on extensively in the all-electric age, but I will make one suggestion that may at first sound chimerical, yet is not as absurd as it appears at first glance. That is, the possibility of controlling the climate, or, at least, the weather, by electricity. It would be of immense benefit to agriculture if we could have continuous sunshine at certain times of the year. It is unnecessary for me to point out that the all-electric age will be a smokeless era, and therefore the nucleus for heavy clouds will not be present. This, however, is a problem of more importance in Great Britain than in America.

"What may be done will be to make the clouds discharge their moisture when and where we will by means of electricity. At present it is considered quite right and reasonable to canalize rivers and make great works for adding to the fertility of countries by means of irrigation, but I believe that the time will come when it will be thought no more wonderful largely to control our weather than it is now thought wonderful to control the water after it has fallen on the land. I think that it will be possible to acquire knowledge which will enable us largely to control by electrical means the sunshine which reaches us, and in a climate which usually has ample moisture in its atmosphere to produce rainfall when and where we require it.

"It seems to me that it may be possible, when we know a great deal more about electricity than we do to-day, to set up an electrical defence along our coasts by which we could cause the moisture in the clouds to fall in the form of rain and so prevent those clouds drifting over the country between ourselves and the sun, which they now blot out. It also seems to me that it will be possible, when more water on the country is required, to cause the falling of rain from the clouds passing over the highest part of the country, and so produce an abundance of water which, properly used, would greatly add to the fertility of the land.

"Of course it may seem that these are only mad visions of the future, but I think we can hardly consider these results more improbable than any one would have considered wireless telegraphy or flight in heavier than air machines fifty years ago. I mention them because they would constitute another great use of electricity in the all-electric age, which is not far off."

"How far?" I asked.

Mr. Ferranti paused and thought for a moment.

"Sooner than most people imagine," he said. "Scientific men are working on all of the problems involved. Their researches are giving promise of success. I should say, speaking conservatively, within ten years we should have the necessary results.

"I do not mean," he continued, "that we shall see the all-electric age in full effect and operation in a decade from now. What I mean is that science will by that time have shown the way—have demonstrated the commercial possibility of the substitution of electricity for all other forms of heat, light and power. It will then be a matter for capital, and the billions of capital that will be required to carry out the possibilities will not be subscribed in a day. We cannot tell what political or social revolutions may have occurred to make it impossible to get so much capital and invest it safely by that time. The all-electric age cannot be achieved unless a free rein be given capital to put its money where it will be sure to earn an income. I do not defend the abuses of capital—the use of combinations to gouge the people with high prices or to enslave them with low wages—but unless the present agitation against wealth, which is being felt in England even more than in America, ceases there will be an end to electrical development, or a very great retardment of scientific progress at the least.

"But with reasonable opportunities given to capital the all-electric age will surely come in the near future—the age of brightness and of beauty, the smokeless era when all may enjoy the conveniences and luxuries that electricity makes possible; when electrically operated machinery will relieve labor from much of its most toilsome drudgery; when our soils shall be renewed and our crops cultivated by the aid of the mystic current; when our coal supplies, instead of approaching exhaustion at lightning speed, will do so much more work to a ton of coal than at present that their life will be more than doubled, culminating in the great day when the falling waters of nature's own power houses shall turn the wheels, light the fires and illuminate the dwellings of all the world."

Curiosities of Coincidence.

LORD ACTON for many years kept a record of coincidences. A very strange one occurred within his own experience.

A rumor had spread that his wife had drowned herself. She had done nothing of the kind, but it was quite true that a Baroness Acton had drowned herself at Tegernsee, where Lord and Lady Acton were staying, and had drowned herself under their very window.

The strangest of all coincidences noted by Lord Acton concerned Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey, who was murdered at the bottom of what is now Primrose Hill, but was then known as Greenberry Hill, in London.

Three men were hanged for the murder. Their names, respectively, were Green, Berry and Hill.

In the list of coincidences pertaining to accidents a number of interesting examples are of authentic record. It has been pointed out that very often persons have been surprised by events occurring, as it seemed, at the immediate suggestion of the victims. In the excitement of the moment they have offered "fate," "divine Providence" or some unknown law of association of power of mind over matter as suitable explanations, but when all is said calm reason must classify such phenomena as pure coincidence.

Some years ago a well known business man, who was accustomed to make weekly trips between an Eastern city and Chicago, had the uncomfortable experience of having a wheel break immediately under his seat while the train was going at full speed. It was only by the most fortunate of leaps that he was able to escape losing his life. Naturally this experience made a very deep impression upon him.

It was almost a year later that he took the same train and, by a strange chance, was assigned the same chair. During a chat with a friend whom he had just met he glanced out of the window and recognized the landscape and the very spot of his narrow escape. He told the friend the story of the broken wheel. Just as he reached the climax of his recital, saying, "The cold shivers go down my back at the mere thought of it. There it is again!" incredible as it may seem, the identical accident happened on the same train, almost between the same two fields adjoining the track, and the victim of this oddest of coincidences barely escaped the same way as before.

Such weird coincidences are always difficult of credence, but no less an authority than Darwin, the naturalist, mentions one of the same kind, though different in degree. One of a party whereof Darwin was a member was speaking of the earthquake of Talcahuano, in Northern Chili, on which occasion the father had lost all his property and the narrator himself had barely escaped with his life. Then, writes Darwin, there ensued a curious coincidence. A German, one of the party, got up, saying that he would never sit in a room in those countries with the door shut, as, owing to his having done so, he once nearly lost his life at Sopiapo. Accordingly, he opened the door. No sooner had he done so than he cried out, "Here it comes again!" and another shock commenced. The whole party escaped.

How the Northwest Was Saved.

BUT for the foresight, it is said, of a missionary the United States would have "traded off" to Great Britain that immense territory that now forms two of the greatest States of the Northwest—Oregon and Washington.

Marcus Whitman had crossed the plains and the mountains to Oregon, and knew, from a year's residence, the value of the country. He also knew that the Hudson Bay Company was anxious to obtain possession of the whole Northwest, and had circulated the report that it was impossible for emigrants to cross the mountains in wagons.

At a dinner given in 1842, at which Dr. Whitman and several of the company's chief officers were present, it was received that a band of British emigrants had crossed the mountains. Toasts were drunk in honor of the event. "Now the Americans may whistle, the country is ours!" one of the Englishmen is reported to have exclaimed jubilantly.

But Whitman thought otherwise. The next day he started for Washington on horseback. He made the journey in winter, and with frozen limbs called on Daniel Webster, then Secretary of State. Upon his presentation of the situation Whitman was gruffly told by Webster that the country was worthless, and that he as Secretary of State, was about to trade that "worthless region" for valuable concessions, with reference to the Newfoundland fisheries.

Finding that a treaty had already been approved by the Senate and was awaiting formal ratification and proclamation by President Tyler, Dr. Whitman sought the President. When the missionary had finished his story the President said:—

"Sir, your frozen limbs attest your sincerity. Can you take emigrants across the mountains in wagons?"

"Give me six months and I will take one thousand across," answered the doctor.

"If you can take them across," added Tyler, "the treaty shall not be ratified."

In 1843 a band of emigrants under the guidance of the doctor started from Missouri for Oregon. A deputation from the Hudson Bay Company met them on the plains, advising them that it was impossible for them to cross the mountains in their wagons. The emigrants decided to leave their wagons and finish the journey on horseback.

As this course would have ruined Whitman's plan of saving the country to the United States, he labored with the leaders of the band until they consented to follow the doctor's advice and guidance. The band did cross the mountains in their wagons, the treaty was not ratified, and the fertile Northwest was saved to the United States.

DESPERATE FIGHT OF THE MOSLEMS

The "Holy War" Calls Out All The Fighting Qualities of The Meatless Turk.

In connection with the desperate fight of the Turks against the Italians Europeans cannot understand the the fervid fanaticism that impels men of the East to battle for their religion without thought of pay, or hardships, and that counts death as a welcome and honoured achievement. The Djihad, or Holy War, is the Moslem's most formidable tactic to crush the enemy. In the first centuries the Christian Orient experienced its terrible sway on more than one occasion, and the Crusaders learned to dread it more than hunger and thirst and the direst privations of desert life. The Holy War is a merciless campaign, not for worldly possessions, not for territory, not even for Fatherland, but for the Islam religion, for the faith of the Prophet. It is a fight to the last drop of blood, a fight whose limit is the tomb, a fight waged with that savage fierceness and vehemence which know no bounds, no control, no restraining influence. Its passion and its enthusiasm are the wildfire of blind fanaticism.

The impassioned, merciless assault upon the enemy is, however, not the only duty of the Moslem during the Djihad. The traditional sayings of the Prophet enjoin the fulfillment of a number of other obligations, not less sacred. One of these obligations is implicit obedience to the leader of the campaign, whoever he may be. All personal dislikes must cease, and complete harmony between the Emir or the Sheikh and the fighter must prevail. Another duty is patience and faithfulness, and the determination to remain at the post to be defended to the very last beat of the pulse—if need be night after night without food, without sleep.

One engaged in the Holy War must not think of his family left at home. A special "Hadisseh" provides that these are cared for and attended to in the most conscientious manner by the aged priests unable to join the warriors.

A saying of the Prophet, war can only be successful if the movements of the army are kept secret from the enemy, shows that during Djihad the Moslem does not neglect the ordinary stratagems and tactics of warfare. Those who read Byzantine history will find that the great leaders of Moslem armies could always cope, with admirable skill and efficiency, with the wiles and cunning of the early Roman warriors.

Everyone engaged in Holy War is called "Shehid" or martyr. To become a Shehid, however, the warrior must be fully conscious of the Djihid taking place for the benefit of the faith of Islam. A soldier fallen in a simple battle is not a martyr, however much he might have suffered for his country. A Shehid refuses to accept payment, and scorns every attempt of making his lot easy. To him alone complete forgiveness of sin is granted in the world of houris. The Shehids who lose their lives on the sea are also released by Allah from all worldly debts, obligations and promises.

A Moslem warrior can obtain the crown of glory in the other world and also during an honourable retreat, if the latter is accomplished according to the regulations of holy warfare. The most important of these regulations is: "Retreat in order to gather forces for a renewed and more formidable onslaught; never otherwise."

There exists a "Hadisseh" which enjoins upon every tribe adhering to the tenets of Islam the necessity to always have a special, well-trained body of fighters ready at a moment's notice to follow the war-cry of Djihad. This accounts for the fact of the Italians in Tripoli having to meet such formidable masses of warriors almost immediately after invasion. It almost looked as if these masses were just waiting for the enemy to come in.

A shehid who is prompted to war not by personal interests, but solely for the purpose of defending Allah and the faith of Islam, is promised that the eternal fire of hell will never reach his feet. He who shows unbending patience, integrity and equanimity of mind during Holy War will have respite from the tortures of the tomb.

To stimulate the Shehid in his sacred duties of sacrificing his life for his religion there exists a "Hadisseh" with a somewhat paradoxical meaning. It is to the following effect: "Thine enemy, O Faithful, during the Djihad is not thine enemy at all; he is thy friend, the best of thy benefactors, since it is he most of all who is helping thee to experience the ecstasies of martyrdom and the bliss of eternal life."

KILLED THE LEPERS

Terrible Tragedy Reported Near the French Frontier in China.

The Mission to Lepers in India and the East is responsible for a tragic story of the massacre of a number of lepers in a district near the French frontier in China. According to this story a military commander of a district induced the lepers to assemble by the announcement that a distribution of rice would be made. A large number gathered, bringing with them many children. Arrived at the rendezvous, the lepers were surrounded by soldiers and shot down. Dead and wounded were then shovelled into a deep pit already prepared, and kerosene oil poured over them, the whole mass then being set on fire. A few who escaped were hunted down on the hills and killed.

COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

The Feminist Movement is Making Great Strides in Germany.

An important event in the growth of the feminist movement in Germany, which in the last few years has made great strides, was the opening in Leipsig of the first University College for Women in Germany.

The new college will not confine its students to the ordinary curriculum, but has as its chief object the education of women in the performance of their duties as the mothers of the nation. At the same time, the school is by no means to be considered as a cooking and sewing class, but will train its students in all the ordinary university branches of learning.

The school owes its foundation entirely to the efforts of Frau Henriette Goldschmidt, the widow of a Jewish Rabbi, and one of the most remarkable figures at the head of the German feminist movement. Frau Goldschmidt is now 86 years of age, and has worked nearly all her life for the advancement of her sex. The Women's University College has been one of her cherished aspirations, and for the last forty years she has worked unceasingly towards the realization of her scheme. The institution is promised a great future, for over 500 students have registered themselves for the first year's course.

THE KAISER'S DECORATIONS

Emperor William is the Most Decorated Person in the World.

The German Emperor is the most decorated personage in the world, and if he were to display all the orders and stars to which he is entitled, his entire person would be hidden. As King of Prussia, he is head of every Prussian Companionship, including the Black Eagle (the highest of all), the Red eagle, The Knights of Jerusalem, the Orders of the Crown and Pour le Marine, and the Order of the House of Hohenzollern.

Besides imperial and Prussian decorations he can if he so wishes wear those of almost all foreign orders of distinction. Among these are the English Order of the Garter, the Russian Order of St. Andreas, the Italian Order of the Annunciation, the Danish Order of the Elephant, the Swedish Order of the Sepharine, the Norwegian Order of the Lion, and the Spanish Order of the Golden Fleece.

Foreign Orders are only worn by the Kaiser in honor of a foreign guest, or when he is in the country of the Order. One of the decorations he most constantly displays is that known as the "Generals' Order," instituted in remembrance of the veterans who formed the staff of old Emperor William. Haridy less a favorite with him is the medallion commemorating his silver wedding, with its "XXV" set in a silver wreath.

HARD ON THE BLONDS

A Correspondent Says Dark Women are the Stronger Type.

A fair-haired woman correspondent of the Eclaireur de Nice has made an energetic protest against the dictum recently laid down by a French savant on the intellectual and physical superiority of brunettes. The scientist in question assert that two generations hence fair women will be extinct and that the blonde woman is a degenerate type. Dark women, he adds, are usually more robust and stronger physically and intellectually than their fair sisters. The correspondent challenges these statements and says that a true French blonde is a "gem." The letter is signed "A fair woman who rides horses, climbs trees, and receives doctors only at her dinner table."

FROM MESSENGER BOY TO RAILROAD MANAGER

New Vice-President of the Union Pacific a Native of Hamilton

Mr. William B. Scott, promoted to the position of Vice-President and General Manager of the Union Pacific Railway, with offices at Omaha, Neb., is a native of Canada, having been born in Hamilton forty-nine years ago. Mr. Scott has been connected with almost a score of railways for thirty-eight years. He got his first taste of railway work as a messenger boy for the Grand Trunk in his native city, and after a few years went into the freight sheds at Guelph. While freight clerk in the agricultural city he spent his spare time studying telegraphy, and after mastering the baffling "ticker," he went to Toronto. Then he went to Winnipeg as train despatcher for the C.P.R., to the Great Northern as chief despatcher and trainmaster on construction, to the Great Western as Superintendent of Telegraphs, to the Santa Fe as Trainmaster, and later as Superintendent in Texas, to the San Antonio as Superintendent at San Antonio, to the Houston & Texas Central as General Superintendent, and finally in 1905 to the Harriman lines as Assistant Director of Maintenance and Operation at Chicago, where he has been until the present.

OIL DRIVEN SHIP

A Description of the "Toiler," the First of Her Kind in Canada

The first oil-driven ship on Canadian waters is the "Toiler," a vessel without a funnel. In many ways the Toiler is more economical than a steam-driven boat. She has a greater deadweight capacity owing to the fact that the Diesel engines are much lighter than steam engines and boilers. Furthermore, as she carries no boilers the boiler space is saved and besides the oil fuel is carried in the double bottom in place of water ballast, thus saving bunker space. The consumption of oil is much less in weight than the consumption of coal for steam engines. In the Toiler the consumption at full speed does not exceed 1.75 tons per day of oil fuel of 18 B. T. U. calorific value, whereas with steam engines of equal power the consumption would not be less than eight tons per day.

Not only is the economy of this vessel shown in the increased deadweight of cargo carried, and the increased cubic capacity and the low fuel consumption, but the staff on board to attend to the Diesel engines is less than the staff required for steam engines and boilers, the engine-room staff being about the same while the firemen are not required.

The deck machinery and engine-room accessories of the Toiler are driven by compressed air, being furnished by a compressor driven by a Diesel engine. The electric light, with which the vessel is fitted, obtains its power from a paraffin engine. The accommodation is heated by hot water, the heat being obtained from the exhaust gases of the main engine. There is thus no steam on board the boat, and the vessel, therefore, presents an unusual appearance in having no funnels, and as the masts are mainly used for hoisting purposes and, therefore, very small, her appearance is decidedly different from that of the types of boats to which we are accustomed.

The accommodation for the officers and crew is well fitted up and excellent in every respect.

Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

"I am all right now, thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy."

The same relief is ready for you. Are you sure you do not need it? If Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy helped Charles Holmes, why won't it help you?

"I was troubled with heart disease, and after reading about Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I got a bottle. Before I got the Heart Remedy I had to sit up most of the night, and felt very bad at my stomach. Whatever I would eat made me feel worse, and my heart beat very fast. But thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I am all right now. I eat good, sleep good, and feel like a new man, although I am almost 68 years old. I have been a soldier in the late war of the rebellion, and was badly wounded." CHARLES HOLMES, Private Co. SAFE FROM TYPHOID
"FRUIT-A-TIVES" THE BEST PREVENTATIVE

There is practically no danger of Typhoid Fever as long as you keep the bowels regular with "Fruit-a-tives."

Typhoid is an inflammation of the bowels, due to a germ. This germ enters the body in milk, water or food. If the bowels are constipated, the germ remains in the body long enough to attack the delicate lining and thus Typhoid begins.

"Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the liver, kidneys and skin, and cleans the system of all impurities. "Fruit-a-tives" will not cure Typhoid — but it will cure Constipation, assist Digestion and tone up the system — thus preventing Typhoid.

The Weak, Lame, Aching Back
Comes From The Kidneys.

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken immediately so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

They go right to the seat of the trouble, heal the delicate membranes of the kidneys and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. Joseph Throop, Upper Point de Bute, N.B., writes:—"I cannot speak too well of Doan's Kidney Pills. For two years I was so tired life was a burden, and I got up more tired than when I went to bed, and my back was so lame I could hardly straighten up. I took different kinds of medicine, but none of them did me any good until a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so, and to-day I don't know what it is to be tired, and my lame back is all gone. I can recommend them to any person suffering with lame back and that terrible tired feeling."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

"Why, man," said the tourist to the farmer, "you ought to be able to make lots of money shipping green corn to the northern market."

"Yes, I orter," was the sullen reply. "You have the land, I suppose, and can get the seed."

"Yes, I guess so."

"Then why don't you go into the speculation?"

IT WAS A FINE ARRAY OF WITNESSES THAT SPOKE UP FOR LABOUR'S CAUSE

R. R. Hall's Saturday Night Rally Becomes an Experience Meeting on the Workman's Compensation Act---Manufacturers, Cabinet Ministers, Workmen, All Bear Testimony ---Mr. Hall Tells Why the Whitney Government's Attitude Toward the Workingman is Like a Fore-and-aft Cap.

Saturday night's rally in R. R. Hall's committee rooms was the biggest and most earnest since the campaign began. Mr. Hall's convincing speeches have had their effect in attracting pepole to his banner. Every seat in the hall was filled when the meeting opened, and those who came later had to stand up.

All the speakers had something to say about the Workmen's Compensation Act. Mr. Hall's advanced stand on this matter has won him not only the support of the workingmen, but also of the manufacturers, who have no interest in keeping injured men out of their rightful damages.

Chairman Hartley said the country was all right for R. R. Hall, but the chief battle ground was in the city.

"As for the workingmen," said Mr. Hartley, "Mr. Hall has come out as their special champion. I remind you of Nelson's famous signal at Trafalgar. "Every man must do his duty." The Whitney Government has done nothing for the cause of labour. It would be against the custom and traditions of the party to which Sir James Whitney belongs to do anything for labour. In every time and clime it has always been the Liberal party that befriended the workingmen."

"And let me tell you," concluded Mr. Hartley, "that the Liberal party is out of power only temporarily. It's only a temporary displacement, like the swinging of a star. Vote for R. R. Hall, who is not only the workingman's candidate, but a good Liberal into the bargain."

Peck Was For Dividends.

Mr. Robert McGregor, whose name had figured in one of Mr. Peck's numerous explanatory letters, appeared on Mr. Hall's platform, just to show, as he said, what stand he was taking.

"Mr. Hall is the only candidate in my recollection," said Mr. McGregor, "in West Peterborough, who has come boldly out and proclaimed himself in the interest of the workingman. He announces that he will make it his business to go after what we have striven years to obtain. I believe it is our duty, when we have a man of his ability, and willingness, to forward measures for the benefit of the working classes, to support and work for him".

"As regards Mr. Peck," continued Mr. Macgregor, "I notice that until Mr. Hall announced his platform, Mr. Peck was dumb as an oyster, and even after that all he could promise about the Workman's Compensation Act was delay, investigation, and other quibbles. He asks us to wait. We have waited for years. Now is the time for getting".

"Mr. Peck has a letter in the Examiner to-night," said Mr. McGregor, "in which he says that he had always imagined that the printers' arbitration was satisfactory to them and to myself, who was one of the arbitrators. I tell him right now that it is satisfactory to neither. I signed the majority report, with reluctance because otherwise the printers would not have received anything like the advance they got. The decision was frankly a compromise. If I had only had to do business with Mr. Matthews we would have planned for better terms. But Mr. Peck stood in the way. His stand was that the employers had their money invested in this business, that dividends had to be paid, and that the men's wages could come out of what was left".

A Voice from the West.

Hon. William Buchanan, M. P. formerly Cabinet Minister in the Alberta Government, and now the Liberal M. P. for Lethbridge, took advantage of a flying visit to say a few words.

"You must not think I'm 'butting in', he explained. "I'm an old Ontario boy. I lived nine years in this town of Peterborough, and I'm interested in the success of my old friend, Mr Hall, as I am interested in the success of Liberal candidates everywhere".

I am a Liberal in Dominion politics," continued Mr. Buchanan, "and also in provincial politics wherever the province may be. In fact I am always a Liberal because the Liberals are on the right side—they are the friends of the people. Your New Ontario leader, Mr Rowell, is a coming man. Your candidate, Mr Hall, is not only a coming man, but one who has come. The western members of parliament remember, and speak highly of him, as one who did a great deal more than win his spurs at Ottawa. When Leader Rowell comes to power, I have no doubt Mr. Hall will be a member of his cabinet.

"And don't be discouraged," said Mr Buchanan, "because you are out of power. Power isn't everything. Principle is more. You can fight for principle, and when you come into power you can put your principles into effect."

"Mr. Hall is carrying out the traditions of his party when he takes up the Workman's Compensation Act. You need an Act like he suggests. Ontario is behind the times. You are behind the young province of Alberta, whose very first Legislature gave the workingman just such an Act as Mr. Hall advocates.

"And, let me tell you," said Mr. Buchanan, "to get an Act like that you must put Liberals in. The Liberals stand for the common people, but the Conservatives stand for the big interests. If the Whitney Government gave you a Workman's Compensation Act be sure there would be a 'joker' in it somewhere, that would take the edge off it. But if the Liberals give you a Workman's Compensation Act it will be the real thing."

Mr. Buchanan warned the electors against the dangers of a big majority in the Legislature.

"It isn't healthy," said Mr. Buchanan. "I myself have sat in the Alberta Legislature where there was a majority of 38 in a House of 41. It has a tendency to make a Government lie down on its job. It is your manifest duty to vote for Mr. Hall, who will be Mr. Rowell's strongest lieutenant and Sir James Whitney's most aggressive and enterprising critic."

The Workingmen's Real Foe.

Mr. Andrew Macfarlane said he supported Mr. Hall because he was looking after the interests of the workingman.

"And, as we're all workingmen—goodness knows, I work ten times as hard with my head as I ever did with my hands, at the lathe—Mr. Hall is looking after the interests of all of us."

"The Whitney Government," continued Mr. Macfarlane, "claims to have done wonderful things. I can't see it. All he has done is to sit tight, and take advantage of the previous good legislation of the Liberals. Outside of that he has doubled the expenditure, raised all his friends' salaries, made a mess of the school question, and done absolutely nothing to the Workman's Compensation Act".

"Mr. Hall is on the right track," said Mr. Macfarlane, "when he goes after an air-tight, copper-riveted Workman's Compensation Act. A just and equitable Workman's Compensation Act is in the interests of everybody—the workingman, the employers, and the citizens, generally. The manufacturer insures his workmen against accident, or death, in an insurance company. He pays the premiums. When a man is hurt the employer notifies the insurance company, and that ends his connection with it. He would rather see his workman get the money than the insurance company, but as the present defective law works out, what chance has the workingman when he fights a lawsuit against a rich corporation like an insurance company?

"The manufacturer," said Mr Macfarlane, "wants to see the workingman get a square deal. We'd rather see the money we contribute go to the workingman than to the insurance company, the lawyers, and the all-devouring court costs. I think it a shame that only one-third of what the manufacturers of Canada pay into the accident insurance companies, ever reaches the injured workingman.

"I hope," concluded Mr. Macfarlane, "that you will vote for Mr. Hall and a Workman's Compensation Act that will hand over the money without law suits."

The Candidate Speaks.

Mr R R. Hall's remarks on bilingual schools, model schools, non-taxation of improvements, and other issues of the campaign were warmly applauded, but most of the interest naturally centred around his discussion of the Workman's Compensation Act.

"As it happens," said Mr. Hall, "this rally has to-night taken shape as a sort of experience meeting on the Workman's Compensation Act. That shows which way your minds are running. I am glad to see that my stand on this matter commends itself to all fair-minded men in the community. Mr. Macfarlane has pointed out that the injured workingman has to fight, not the manufacturer, but the Insurance Company. We must have a Workman's Compensation Act that will put an end to this vexatious litigation by insurance companies against the workingman. And when the manufacturer sympathizes with efforts to obtain a more equitable Workman's Compensation Act it is high time for the workingman to join in."

"I was asked the other day," continued Mr. Hall, "is this Workman's Compensation Act just your own plank, or is it the plank of the Liberal party in Ontario. In answer to that I will state that I announced my platform days before the platform of the party was made in Toronto. I made it my duty to be present at Toronto and see that that particular plank got into the platform. So that I can now assure the workingmen of Peterborough that not only will the Workman's Compensation Act have my assistance, but it will have the support of all the Liberals everywhere in Ontario".

The Whole Party Behind It.

"The only difference between Mr. Rowell's platform and my platform, in this matter," said Mr. Hall, "is the wording. What we are all after is a real Compensation Act, not a mere farce, such as the Whitney Government is satisfied with. While England and Germany, and the United States, and Alberta, and Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and British Columbia, have been passing up-to-date Compensation Acts, Ontario has done nothing. No advance has been made in some years, and, judging from their shuffling, the Whitney Government doesn't intend doing anything about it for another seven years if they can help it."

A Fore and Aft Cap.

"The platform of the Liberal party, in regard to the Workman's Compensation Act is perfectly understandable," said Mr. Hall; "but the position of the Whitney Government and Mr. Peck is like a fore-and-aft cap, which can go backwards, forwards, or sideways, and not make much difference."

"Which brings me," said Mr. Hall, "to one of the sly, silly arguments they are whispering to the workingman. They say: 'Why, if you get the perfect Workman's Compensation Act Hall is trying for you'll have workingmen coming here from all parts of the world to claim its protection, and crowd you out of your jobs.'"

"Let me answer that bone-headed objection more seriously than it deserves: Such an Act has been passed in England, in Germany, in the United States, in Alberta, and it has not operated to bring about a glut of workingmen from other countries. The idea is preposterous. The other countries are far ahead of us in this respect. When we get a decent Workman's Compensation Act, we shall simply have caught up with the rest of the world. But to answer a fool, according to his folly, how absurd it is to suppose that just because we have a perfect Workman's Compensation Act workingmen will flock to Peterborough from all over the world to get hurt"!

A Worthy Leader.

"I was glad, indeed," said Mr. Hall "to hear Mr. Buchanan's eulogy of our leader, Mr. Rowell. He is a man of high ideals and strong convictions. His stand on the social and industrial betterment of the people is such as commends the hearty support of every candidate and every Liberal. He is particularly clear on the matter of substituting a simple majority for the three-fifths' vote in local option contests, and also on the matter of taking the license system out of politics. I think the moral welfare of this province would be much safer in Mr Rowell's hands than in the Whitney Government's.

"Sir James Whitney," concluded Mr Hall, "has blocked the wheels of progress long enough. When I get to Toronto I am going to do some prodding. Although the country is election-tired, I am confident of the result. I will come to Peterborough with three hundred majority from the country, and it is up to the city and the workingmen to confirm that majority and turn it into a victory."

Mr. Stratton's Speech.

Hon. J. R Stratton told the electors to keep their eye on the main chance and not be led astray by red-herrings. Hydro-Electric clap trap, and Review mouthings.

"I observe in to-night's Review," said Mr Stratton, "this statement Mr. Hall and the Examiner have started right in to distort and befog the situation as much as possible. They have an axe to grind, both political and financial. They are not out to benefit the people."

"All I can say," said Mr. Stratton, "is that the Review's statement is absolutely false. I'll give the Review one thousand dollars for any charity it can name if it can show that I have a dollar's interest in any water power on the Trent Valley system.

"Bear in mind," said Mr. Stratton, "that Mr. Hall is fighting the workingman's battle. I don't care whether you voted for me or not in the last election. Vote for Mr. Hall. He is your friend. Mr. Peck is a nice fellow, but Mr. Hall is a hustler. As workingmen, which is your choice. I am heartily in favour of Mr. Hall's idea of a Workman's Compensation Act, both as a workingman, myself, who works more hours a day than any other workingman in Peterborough, and as a shareholder in industries employing over 2,000 hands. I am sure I, or any other manufacturer would sooner see the injured workingman get our money than the insurance company."

The meeting closed with cheers for the King and the Candidate.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a quicker and cheaper way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application of this liniment he was well. For sale by all dealers.

Clergyman's Complaint

MONTREAL, QUE., DEC. 4.—This bank is being run for the benefit of officials and employees, not for shareholders" declared Rev. G. H. Parker, of Lennoxville, at the annual meeting of the shareholders of the bank of Montreal this afternoon. Rev. Mr. Parker's criticism was probably the most exciting thing that has cropped up at a meeting of the Bank of Montreal, since its inception. He pointed out that some years ago there were ten directors at a salary of $25,000 per year. Now there were twelve at $35,000. He declared this money should have gone to increase the shareholders' dividends. Mr. Parker's remarks were greeted by a round of applause from other shareholders.

Sir Edward Clouston hinted at an increased dividend and resigned from the office of General Manager. H. V. Meredith was chosen to succeed him.

GUILTY OF THEFT

John A. McDonald Convicted of Stealing $30 From Polack—Fellow-Workman on Construction Work

REMANDED FOR SENTENCE

John A. Macdonald, a young man apparently just out of his 'teens, was convicted of stealing $30 from B. Emrpyes, a Polack, in police court this morning. Macdonald elected to be tried summarily, and pleaded not guilty. He admitted, however, that he had been drinking heavily and did not know exactly what had happened. He said that he had a mother and two children to support in Montreal and he was just preparing to go home, as his job on the construction work on the C.P.R. had been completed. He was remanded for a week for sentence.

Det. Newhall's Evidence.

Detective Newhall testified as follows:

"On Wednesday, 29th last, I arrested Macdonald on George street and brought him to the police station. I found on him, the overcoat produced, a new pair of trousers, a gray sweater, a green silk scarf, a new tweed cap, a gold watch and chain and this purse, containing $5.45, inside of which was an extra gang cheque, C.P.R. No. 120. When asked where he got them, he said he had been drunk and had no recollection of anything that had happened. I could smell whiskey off him when I arrested him, but he was not drunk. I asked him the number of his cheque, one like the one produced, only red. He said it was No. 104. This B. Emrpyes' cheque is No. 120."

The Magistrate thought that since the questions were asked the prisoner after his arrest, without the officer in charge warning him that anything he might say would be used as evidence against him, he could not accept this statement as evidence. Crown Attorney R. E. Wood pointed out, however, that the law now allows a police officer to ask a man questions after he is arrested, and without warning him, and that his answers may be taken as evidence.

"After court next morning," continued Det. Newhall, "I was searching the prisoner again, when he told when he got the money and also what he had done with it. He said that he had come from Nova Scotia, and had been engaged on the C.P.R. construction money from the Pollack and spend near here. He admitted taking the ing it on the articles I have already referred to. He said he must have spent the remainder on drink and counted $3.00 that he had remembered spending on liquor. Previous to his arrest, on the morning of Nov. 23rd, I saw him walking around the streets without an overcoat and very shabbily dressed. Just after I heard of this theft, I saw him walking around with all this stuff on him and I arrested him."

H. Goldberg's Evidence.

H. Goldberg was called and testified:

"I am in the clothing business, 291 George street. On Tuesday the prisoner came into my store and purchased a watch and chain at $6.50, an overcoat at $10, some underwear $1.50, a sweater $2.00, one pair of trousers at $3.50, a pair of socks at 25c., a cap at 75c. and a pair of gloves at $1.25, the total bill amounting to $26.75, which he paid."

Emrpyes was then put in the box, and on account of his ignorance of the English language was unable to give intelligible evidence, and a Polock interpreter called in, was unable to do much in the line of interpretation. He merely was able to convey to the Magistrate that Emrpyes was drunk when the money was stolen from him. Emrpyes said he had $35 altogether and also managed to inform the court that he had been working in the same gang as the prisoner previously.

Mr. Bruce Lee, an employee of a local hotel, testified to seeing the prisoner and the plaintiff drinking together.

Magistrate Dumble then stated that he found the prisoner guilty, but on request from the Crown Attorney, a remand for a week was made for sentence.

Emrpyes did not want to take the things that had been purchased with the money, but asked the cash. When the Magistrate asked him if he wanted the goods he began to cry, seeming to imagine that he was going to be forced to take the goods and go without his money. The Magistrate, however, thought that the merchant from whom the goods were purchased should receive the same back and refund the money, seeing it had been stolen.

MINORITY RULE.

It seems like overworking the loyalty, and British connection, and Protestant ascendancy cry in Ontario to produce a Borden majority of 70 in Ontario that comes down to 44 on a division in the House. A Nationalist minority of fifteen in Quebec seems to have more influence in matters of national and imperial moment than the three score and ten Conservative majority in Ontario. The minority of fifteen in Quebec gets all its wants; the big majority in Ontario gets—what it doesn't want; what it didn't vote for; what it overwhelmingly voted against.

TAKE HIM AT HIS WORD.

Sir James Whitney, at Guelph, declared that no matter what might be the political principles of a member elected for any constituency, that constituency would still get just treatment from the Government. Conservatives who believe that Sir James is a man of his word are deprived of an argument much used, to the effect that it is in the interests of a constituency to elect a member in political sympathy with the Government. According to Sir James, it matters not, so far as Government favours are concerned, who represents West Peterborough. Even strong party men concede that the Conservative majority in the present Legislature is too large in the interests of good government. At the same time, it is evidently more to the advantage of West Peterborough that it be represented by a member in sympathy with the progressive measures the people demand, and to which the present Government is antagonistic, than by a member who will have only half-hearted interest in them, or is totally opposed to them. Mr. Hall has a platform that calls for energetic legislation in the interests of labour and of reform of the assessment law, to bring it in line with justice to every class of ratepayer, so that every interest, great or small, will contribute its fair share, and its fair share only to the municipal revenue. We should take Sir James at his word.

ONE-MAN POWER.

Local party protagonists seem to be more interested in horse power than man power, and forget—to exploit Sir James Whitney as a shining example of man-power—one man-power. Yet, he is that. His autocratic bearing, his snubbing practices, his rudeness to deputations, and to members of his own following seem to be carried out in regard to his colleagues, who are completely sidetracked this election. Who has not noticed that Sir James is doing all the campaign talking this election? No one of his ministers with sporadic exceptions, is out on the war path, making the side line echoes, as has been the case in other elections. As Sir James does all the doing, un-doing, and not-doing in the Government, it is only fair that he should do all the talking. Hon. Dr. Reaume and Attorney-General Foy did, for one unfortunate moment venture to say a little on "their own hook," as Dr. Reaume says, on the bilingual school question, but they made a mess of it, and Sir James Whitney overlooks and ignores them altogether, and goes his own way, saying nothing, with all his talking, on a subject that everybody is demanding a straight stand on from Premier Whitney. He is determined that one-man power in Ontario shall be a a reality, not a fiction. Sir James Whitney's majority of 68 in the Legislature enables him to be as autocratic and reactionary as a King James, as closely wedded to the status quo, and as hostile to political change as a Metternich, and as impervious to ideas of reform and advance, as any Bourbon of them all. His majority should be cut down.

WHAT SIR JAMES SHOULD SAY.

At Lindsay, Sir James Whitney declared that "the public man who did not have the courage to declare himself on public questions was a public fool."

Sir James should be willing to be measured by his own emphatic standard. He should have the courage to declare himself on the question of the bilingual schools. He should say what he has not yet had the courage to say, whether or not he will have the English language taught properly in the public schools of Ontario:

First, by appointing properly qualified inspectors in French-speaking districts, and insisting and seeing that they do their duty.

Secondly, by training teachers and insisting on the appointment of properly qualified teachers.

Thirdly, by insisting upon the use of only authorized text books in all public schools, and excluding those which are not authorized.

A great many people attach a great deal of importance to this matter. They know, as it is generally known, that in scores and scores of the state-aided schools of Ontario, improperly qualified teachers, some of whom cannot speak English at all, are employed, and that in many of these schools unauthorized textbooks, not in the English language, are used, and that in some of them English is not taught at all, and, in others, it is taught only partially, and imperfectly at that.

Sir James has not yet declared himself on this subject. He has pursued a policy of quibbling and evasion. He has made the astounding declaration that there are no bilingual schools in Ontario, and that the matters of complaint will be attended to when he gets the report of Dr. Merchant, whom Sir James appointed to investigate the condition of the very schools he says do not exist. Why has Sir James refused to make public Dr. Merchant's report on bilingual schools? Why is he withholding it till after the elections? He may say it is not ready. Why isn't it ready? Surely Dr. Merchant was not instructed to delay in making his report? He has had about nine months' time to prepare it. Sir James Whitney is rather condemning himself, according to the standard of public courage he set up at Lindsay. Sir James should have the courage to say where he stands on this subject.

THE POWER MATTER.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, speaking at Owen Sound in his home riding, is reported as follows:

Mr. MacKay's appearance was greeted with thunderous applause. He attacked the Whitney Administration on the Hydro policy Since the Province generally was responsible for the scheme and the bonds, he contended that there should be a flat rate throughout the territory served, for power to municipalities. It was eminently unfair that the Province should be committed to a power policy which insured power to points on the Niagara Peninsula for $12 per horsepower, while it would cost Owen Sound about $50; yet Owen Sound business men stood equally responsible for the Provincial bonds with the men who profited most, residents of the territory within a comparatively short distance of Niagara Falls.

Mr. MacKay here touches the pith of the power-at-cost-question. It seems to be the fair way to fix the cost of power to any municipality, whether near to, or remote from, the source of supply, upon the total cost of the transmission of power to the municipalities interested.

Since all municipalities, whether near or remote, have to contribute to the cost of this transmission, by the expenditure of the funds of the whole people, it seems to be a fair way, and to put all municipalities on the same footing in regard to inducements to manufacturing industries. Twelve dollars per horse power, and even as low as $10 in large blocks, to Welland, and $50 per horse power to Owen Sound, with precisely the same proportionate contribution of public money to the cost of the system, gives the former place a tremendous industrial advantage.

In Peterborough, the power companies distribute power to all parts of the city at the same price, and there is felt to be no injustice. A light or power user within a hundred feet of the transformer, gets no cheaper rate than the consumer five miles distant. The price is fixed on the basis of the total cost of generation and distribution.

The Hydro-Electric scheme, as it has been administered, has been unjust in this regard, that is gives special advantages to some municipalities who have contributed, through the public funds, no more than other municipalities, and unfair in the regard that the whole of the province east of Toronto practically, has had to bear its share of the expenses of distributing power, and has so far received no consideration, except just on the eve of an election.

The people are asked to decide the placing of their votes on a question that cannot be considered in the space of a few days. If it has taken the Hydro-Electric Commission five or six years to make up their minds to try to give Peterborough a fair show, can the people be expected to digest and study the question on its meirts, in as many days?

The Hydro-Electric proposal must be considered and dealt with on its merits and its merits or demerits are not, and cannot be, sufficiently canvassed to enable the people to vote intelligently on the subject next week.

Peterborough is fairly well supplied with power now, and at a reasonable cost; at a far lower rate than most of the favoured towns in the Hydro-Electric zone, which are getting "power at cost." "Power at cost" is a pretty catch phrase, but one must have some idea of the cost before we commit ourselves to supporting the candidate of a government which, apart from one Minister (without portfolio), Mr. Beck, has been hostile, negatively, if not positively, to the Hydro-Electric scheme.

Peterborough wants power at the lowest possible price. Is the election-time hydro-electric proposal the best way to get it? That is the sole question, and that has not been decided; and cannot be decided, in a day.

The people should not be carried away by newspaper bluster that denounces as hostile to cheap power for Peterborough, everybody that does not fall down and worship a proposal that has all the marks of a bid for votes—that was only thought of in the heat of an election campaign, and is yet, and cannot be, before Dec. 11th, understood by the people, who are asked to pronounce upon it.

TAKE HIM AT HIS WORD.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

"The public man who hesitates to say definitely his opinion on a question is a public fool," is Sir James Whitney's latest elegant contribution to the literature of the campaign. The Premier was referring to the attitude of the Liberal party to the bilingual school problem.

Premier Whitney will have no cause for complaint if the people take him at his own word. What is the attitude of the Government of which he is the head towards bilingual schools? Leader Rowell has been vainly endeavouring to secure a straight answer. Premier Whitney himself says there are no bilingual schools, and he says this in the face of the fact that in scores of primary schools in the Province both French and English are taught and in many of them more French than English. Hon. Mr. Foy, a member of the Whitney cabinet, says bilingual schools are illegal and must be abolished. Hon. Dr. Reaume, another member of the cabinet, says that those who are talking most about bilingual schools know least about them, and that Hon. Mr. Foy speaks for himself only and not for the Government.

It is directly charged against the Whitney Government that it is playing a double game, seeking to secure the good will and the votes of both extremes. A little plain speaking on the part of Premier Whitney in regard to this matter would be appreciated. What does he propose to do, or does he propose to do anything?

CERTIFICATES PRESENTED

Interesting Event by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught

Their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught yesterday afternoon received at government house the students who gained certificates at the examination held in the Ottawa centre last summer by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music and His Royal Highness personally presented the certificates awarded by the board.

The teachers of the successful candidates were also present by invitation.

Those present also included Mr. Ernest H. Godfrey, of the census office, honorary local representative of the Associated Board of Music; Mrs. Ernest Godfrey and Mrs. John Grenfell, who, as Miss Mark, formerly trained students for the board's examinations, including two of the teachers whose pupils received certificates. The candidates and their teachers were individually introduced to Their Royal Highnesses who shook hands with each, the Duke when presenting the certificates adding a few words of gracious congratulation and encouragement.

Mr. Godfrey, as representing the Associated Board, then tendered an expression of respectful gratitude to the Duke and Duchess for their gracious reception and to the Duke for his kindness in personally presenting the certificates which, he said, for this reason would always possess for the recipients a greatly enhanced value. They recalled that all connected with music were under deep obligation to the royal family. His late Majesty King Edward, who founded the Royal College of Music, had been patron of the Associated Board, and it was at his request when Prince of Wales that the celebrated composer, Sir Frederick Cowan, was the first of many distinguished musicians to visit Canada and other parts of the British empire as examiners of the board. His Majesty King George had recently accepted the position of patron of the board in succession to King Edward, and now they all rejoiced in having amongst them, as Govenor-General of Canada, so exalted a patron as His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, the president of the Royal Academdy of Music. The Duke's personal presentation of the certificates would be a great stimulus and encouragement to all engaged in the teaching and study of music, not only in the local centre of Ottawa, but also throughout the Dominion of Canada.

His Royal Highness in reply said that it had given himself and the Duchess of Connaught the greatest pleasure to present on that occasion the certificates awarded by the Associated Board. As president of the Royal Academy of Music, which was associated with the Royal College of Music in the holding of these examinations he knew something of the hard work which the winning of their certificates had entailed upon both teachers and pupils. Loving music himself from his very soul and taking the deepest interest in it, he congratulated both teachers and pupils upon their success and he only hoped that another year he might have the pleasure of welcoming a larger number of candidates successful in passing the examinations.

The proceedings were delightfully informal and all were impressed with the kindliness of their reception. By gracious invitation of Their Royal Highnesses the guests before leaving were entertained at tea which brought the proceedings to a close.

LIFE PROBLEMS CLUB OF THE Y.M.C.A. MEET

The Collegiate Boys' Life Problem Club, met in the Y.M.C.A. Saturday evening, December 2nd, with President Stratton in the chair, and the following business was transacted.

1. The secretary read items bearing on the constitution of the club, and enrolled three new members. After welcoming the new members, Dr. Spicer entered upon the discussion of customs and habits, and showed how many customs were dependent upon superstition; also as a result of ancient discoveries and directly an outcome of habits.

An action, he said, upon repetition became a habit and the adoption of this habit by a community became a custom.

He illustrated how a custom could prove to be either beneficial or detrimental. For instance, our social customs tend to prevent awkwardness and misunderstandings. Our parliamentary methods of transacting business lend facility and expedition to the means of discussing and formulating laws.

Mr. Spicer went on to show how we can overcome or do away with a bad habit by substituting a good one for it.

At the conclusion of Dr. Spicer's talk, President Stratton's ideas of customs and habits were read by the secretary, and were much appreciated by all. President Stratton mentioned the bad results especially of using tobacco and alcoholic liquors.

Then as the discussion was completed the boys arranged for a banquet next Saturday evening, when we hope to have Mr. Taylor Statten present to give us an address, and a very good programme is being arranged by the members themselves for the occasion.—L. Stuart, Club Secretary.

Ice Freezing Plant In New Hotel

In connection with the "Chateau Laurier," the new $2,000,000 Grand Trunk Hotel at Ottawa, it has been decided to establish an ice freezing plant, and the Forbes system of sterilization. This means that every drop of water that comes into the hotel for any purpose is first filtered twice, then sterilized and cooled, rendering it not only absolutely pure from all sanitary standpoints, but clear and free from any colouration.

As regards ice, the water from which it is made will be first filtered twice, then converted into steam then condensed and frozen, rendering the ice not only absolutely pure, but a beautiful clear, transparent crystal.

CURED OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box.

HOCKEY PLAYERS WILL WORK OUT AT Y.M.C.A.

The second workout in the training course of the Peterborough Hockey Club at the Y.M.C.A. will be held in the gymnasium to-night at 7 o'clock sharp and every intermediate and junior player in the city is requested to be on hand sharp on time. Physical Director Thompson will have the squad in charge and he promises them an interesting hour to-night. Bring your rubber shoes and get in line.

FRED. SIMPSON VS. TOM LONGBOAT

This proposal of Tom Flanagan's to stage a bout with Tom Longboat as one of the principals is another one of the Irishman's ideas. He has the finest line of this stuff a man ever had. It will draw, too. Everybody in town will want to see the big Redskin swing the mitts. He has been talking of scrapping for years, and always referred to himself as "a champeen scrapper." He is a rushing slugger, and there will be a barrel of fun if they do not put too good a man against him. Flanagan is thinking of bringing Fred Simpson, the Hiawatha Indian runner, down and putting him on with Longboat. Simpson is a fair boxer. He was taught around Peterborough Y.M.C.A.

This story about Longboat giving "Battling" Nelson a black eye in training is no phoney, but there is a sequel. When Tommy lammed the Dane it was a good sound wallop. Just for fun Nelson, who was staggered dropped and rolled over on his face and stiffened out, stimulating a knockout. His attendants took the cue and rushed in with shouts of alarm and carried him to his bench, apparently dead to the world. The Indian executed a war dance of delight. "Bat" refused to open his eyes, got scared, pulled the gloves off unprepared to make a get-away.

Then "Bat" opened one eye and weakly enquired: "Where am I? Did the roof fall in? Who hit me with the club?"

Tommy whispers the story all round and figures he can lick the Dane. —Star Weekly.

HORSE'S LEG SWELLED

Animal Was Too Sore and Lame to Work—Quickly Cured by "Nerviline."

"I have had a long experience in treating horses, and I can safely say that I know of no liniment for strains, sprains, and swelling that is so useful around the stable as Nerviline," writes Mr Joshua E. Murchison, from his home Crofts Hill P. O. I had a fine young mare that wrenched her right fore leg, and from the shoulder down she was stiff, sore, and swollen. I applied Nerviline, and it worked like a charm, in fact that mare was in shape to work a day after I used Nerviline.

"We have used Nerviline on our farm for twenty-five years and never found it wanting. For man or beast it is a wonderful liniment."

We have received nearly five thousand letters recommending Nerviline as a general household liniment, as an unequalled cure for aches and pains. Over a million bottles used each year. Try it yourself. Large bottles of Nerviline 50c, trial size 25c. All dealers, or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

Splendid Sermons At St. Paul's Church

Yesterday St. Paul's congregation was treated to two excellent discourses from its own special missionary at Corea, Rev. D. A. MacDonald, who will spend the week in Peterborough before taking his departure for the scene of his future labours.

Some weeks ago the local Presbyterians set out to increase the amount of their missionary givings. The effort was undertaken in response to an appeal from the General Assembly to the whole Presbyterian Church in Canada to raise for the year 1912 the sum of one million dollars as its missionary budget. St. Paul's church was aske dto aim at $5,000. A canvass of the entire congregation was made by the elders and managers of the church. The congregation was divided into districts and an elder and manager went together and called upon all in the district assigned them. The actual amount subscribed to date is over $4,600. There are a few to hear from yet and this with the amount which the Sunday school and Bible classes will contribute, will raise the total giveing even beyond $5,000. In addition to this the Women's Foreign Missionary Society will give over $1,000. So that the members of St. Paul's church are pledged to give $6,000 a year to all missionary purposes. Part of this amount is to be applied to the support of their own missionary, the Rev. D. A. MacDonald, B. A., who is about to go to Corea. He will address the different young people's organizations and mission bands this evening, and to-morrow evening the ladies are preparing a banquet for the men of the church. Mr. MacDonald and Mr. F. A. Armstrong of Toronto, and others, will address the meeting. Mr. MacDonald will also adress the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and the Women's Missionary Society on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

NOMINATIONS TO-DAY

The race in West Peterborough was officially commenced this morning, when the nominations took place at the Court House. Robert Richard Hall and Edwin Arnold Peck were the two nominees, there being no eleventh hour surprises. Mr. Hall was nominated by Messrs. George A. Gillespie and Hugh Robinson, while Mr. Peck's nomination was made by Messrs. James Kendry and Harry Phelan. Mr. G. L. Hay was named as financial agent for Mr. Hall while Mr. G. W. Hatton will serve in a similar capacity for Mr. Peck. There was no speech-making at all and only a dozen persons were in attendance.

WAS APPRECIATED

His Worship W. George Morrow, Peterborough, Ont.—

Dear Mr. Mayor,—I can assure you that your telegram of greeting, which was read at the Old Boys' dinner last night, was very much appreciated by all present and your suggestion of a warm welcome to us when we return permanently to reside in the old land, was received with enthusiastic cheers. The dinner was a great success and I can assure you that the old boys are loyal to Peterborough and that no other city will ever displace it in our affections.

ADVOCATES COMMISSION

QUEBEC, QUE., DEC. 4.—Mr. Wm. Price, ex-M.P., in an interview, published in to-day's papers, advocates the appointment of a special commission, composed of leading from England, etc., to report on the St. Lawrence watershed with a view of ascertaining if the flow of water is diminishing from natural causes and owing up the opening up of the country and various big canals in Ontario. If they found this to be the cause, they should then ascertain if it is possible to deepen the channel between Quebec and Montreal to a lower depth than obtains at present, without building artificial barricades.

THE MILLIONAIRE MARAUDER

All He Had Really Stolen Was a Girl's Heart.

By MARGARET MUZZEY.

"Going downtown, Dick?"

"Not in this flood. My umbrella has a broken rib."

"You are almost a surgeon. Why don't you set it?" asked Joe. "Take mine and have yours mended."

"Have mine fixed, too, will you?" called a voice from the next room.

"Mine needs a patch," said another young student of medicine, appearing in the door.

"I say, get the handle put on mine while you're about it," demanded a third.

Dick departed with Joe Dart's umbrella over his head and three disabled ones besides his own under his arm. After leaving them with an umbrella mender he did some shopping and went into a corner drug shop to wait for a car. He was absorbed in the marvelous representations of a new patent medicine until, glancing out of the window, he saw his car, seized the nearest umbrella and hurried to the door. As he passed out a feminine voice cried:

"Stop thief! He's stolen my umbrella!"

Without the faintest suspicion that it referred to him Dick ran and jumped on the car.

When he reached the boarding house he carried Joe's umbrella to his own room and forgot it until the next rainy day, when his friends inquired for their mended property.

"The repairs will be finished today. I'll bring your umbrellas on my way back from the hospital," he told them.

When he went out with Joe's umbrella, which he had not returned, it struck him as being rather small for a man, although it had not occurred to him when he carried it before.

As he seated himself in the car going uptown the woman next to him muttered an angry ejacuation. Dick moved his bunch of umbrellas and apologized, fearing he had set it on her foot, when, to his astonishment, she whispered:

"I congratulate you, young man. You have had a very successful morning. If it were not for making a scene that would get my name into the papers I should denounce you here and now."

Dick was speechless. He started to his feet.

"Don't you suppose I recognize my stolen umbrella right there in your hand?"

"North street!" bawled the conductor.

"I will leave you to your own conscience," added the woman and was gone before Dick recovered sufficiently to retort.

"Isn't this your umbrella?" he asked Joe when he reached the house.

"It's five times as good. Where did you get it?"

"I must have exchanged with somebody," said Dick ruefully.

"Take my silver watch out and swap it off for a gold one, will you?" said Joe.

"Who shall you take to the next assembly?" Joe inquired later.

"I have asked Miss Mildred Wells, but as I have met her only once she will probably decline."

"Not Mill with the mercenary mother. She won't be permitted to refuse an invitation from the only son of a gold mine."

"Her mother has never even heard of me," said Dick crossly.

"She'll find you out soon enough. She keeps a regular Bradstreet's of eligible men. She has married all her nieces to diamond tiaras and is just waiting for a chap like you to crown her daughter. Her permission won't be asked this time, though. She is going away tonight. Milly told me so this afternoon."

Joe was right, and Mildred accepted Dick's invitation. During her mother's absence she was relegated to the chaperonage of a much married cousin, who was too engrossed in the pursuit of sterilized nutriment and sanitary apparel for her children to keep a vigilant eye on her guest.

The night of the assembly found her unable to leave her youngest, who, having deposited a dime in his insides, refused to honor a draft of mustard and warm water for the amount. The distracted mother was easily persuaded to allow Milly to go with a friend.

"I shall have to leave early," Milly told her escort. "Mother will be home at 6 o'clock, and I must be there to greet her. I have been staying with Cousin Carrie, you know, but I promised mamma I would be back at our own house when she arrives."

They left the dance at midnight and started for Mildred's home. When they reached the house Dick inserted a latchkey, but it would not turn.

"Bridget has slipped the night latch," exclaimed Milly. "She sleeps on the third story and is so deaf she can't even hear by mail. What shall we do?"

"Isn't there a window I can open somewhere?"

"Suppose you try mother's room. The windows are on the piazza, and they are seldom locked."

"I will do my criminalist," said Dick.

"Just inside the window at the left is a stand with candle and matches. You can easily find the front door when you have a light."

Dick opened the window, stepped inside, felt around with his hand, which came in violent contact with something on the stand and knocked it off. The one match that he found in his waistcoat pocket spluttered only long enough to show him the little china match holder, which had rolled under the edge of the bed. He was on his knees to pick it up when suddenly the room was flooded with electric light and he was seized by the tails of his evening coat and jerked violently backward. Struggling to his feet, he turned and looked directly into the muzzle of a revolver held by the accusing angel who had commended him to his conscience in the street car.

The surprise was mutual. Dick's first impulse was to laugh, but immediate contact with a loaded weapon in the hands of a feminine fury is not stimulating to one's sense of humor if the situation is sustained.

"Ah, ha, young man!" she cried triumphantly. "I have got you now—a 'Daniel come to judgment!'"

"In the lion's den, you mean," said Dick.

"You are delivered into my hands by an interposition sent direct from Providence."

"You've mistaken the postmark; it's from the other place," protested the prisoner.

It was futile to explain.

"You shall not escape me a second time. March straight into that closet."

She locked him in, withdrew the key and left the room.

Dick glued his ear to the keyhole, heard an electric bell, followed by the banging of the front door, and his custodian returned, accompanied by Mildred.

"Cousin Carrie gave me permission to go to the dance, mamma," she said, "and we left, as we thought, in plenty of time to reach here before you."

"What do you mean by 'we?' I found you alone at the front door."

"Why, Dick—I mean Mr. Brown—was with me. My key wouldn't work, so he got in the window. He must be in the house somewhere. It's funny you haven't seen or heard him."

"I caught a young thief in the act of hiding under my bed, and I have put him where he can't do any harm unless from sheer viciousness he sees fit to tear my clothes."

"For heaven's sake, mamma, you haven't mistaken Dick for a burglar! Why, he is the only son of Richard Jones-Brown of Boomville, who owns the largest gold mine in the west."

"That's a lie," said the gentle parent. "Richard Jones-Brown is Mrs. Doan's brother. I met him at her house in New York last week. He promised to send me a photograph of his son, who is a student in the medical college. I shall ask him to dinner."

Milly picked up some unopened mail that lay on the table.

"This must be a photograph. Look at it," she said.

Mrs. Wells tore off the envelope, disclosing the unmistakable likeness of "Daniel come to judgment."

"Oh, what have I done?" she moaned, collapsing into a chair.

Milly snatched the photograph.

"Isn't he the best looking thing you ever saw?" she exclaimed involuntarily. "I'm simply crazy about him!"

"Hear, hear!" bawled Dick, thumping on the closet door.

"Good gracious, mamma, have you locked him up? Give me the key this instant."

"Oh, don't let him out till I get upstairs," implored the old woman. "I've insulted him not once, but twice. He will never forgive me, never!"

But for reasons best known to herself Mildred thought that he would, and he did.

Disorder in the Commons.

Disorderly scenes in the house of commons are comparatively rare. Members, however, have more than once displayed a degree of excitement verging on frenzy. When the reform bill passed its third reading by a majority of nine Macaulay writes that "we set up a shout that you might have heard at Charing Cross, waving our hats, stamping against the floor and clapping our hands. The tellers scarcely got through the crowd, for the house was thronged up to the table and all the floor was fluctuating with heads like the pit of a theater. But you might have heard a pin drop as Duncannon read the numbers. Then again the shouts broke out, and many of us shed tears."

Should the need arise the house of commons may call in the police to assist the sergeant at arms in maintaining order, but the lords have only one way of quelling a disturbance—the reading by the clerk of a standing order on "asperity of speech," passed so long ago as 1626. The last time this power was exercised was during the progress of the ballot bill in 1872, when it acted like oil on the troubled waters and was followed by a singularly calm debate on the burning question before them. Possibly the virtue of the order lies in the fact that it is so long that it acts as a soporific on the noble lords.—London Chronicle.

Old Medical Fakes.

At the international hygiene exhibition at Dresden a department is devoted to showing how fear of sickness in days of old gave the quack and the charlatan a large field for the sale of what they called "preventives." The figure of a woman "guarded against cholera" has a wool abdominal band, a bodice of thick elastic material, a belt adorned with small porous bricks and fastened with a waxed silk ribbon. In the ample sleeves there are tiny brushes and little bags of sand to catch and absorb the "poison," while little tubes containing vinegar and boxes of chalk are concealed under high hair puffs. The top of the hat is provided with a "pinwheel," which revolves when the wearer walks and "keeps the air pure about the wearer."

RICHARD HALL & SON, LIMITED COME TO-MORROW RICHARD HALL & SON, LIMITED

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

A WOMAN in our neighbourhood who has recently had her youngest daugher — the last of a family of six—marry and leave the home nest, has had a nervous breakdown and is in a sanitarium.

And she blames her trouble to lonesomeness, pure and simple.

"I was always used to young life around the house," she says, "and I missed it so. It seemed to me as if everything had just stopped."

Another woma who has lost one child by death and two by marriage has taken to spending much time at the home of a neighbour who was just a bare acquaintance in the old days.

"I cant' see what has come over Ellen to be so intimate with Mrs. L.," comments one of her old friends. "She never used to have any use for her."

"Ah," responds a wiser woman, "You forget that Mrs. L. has three daughters growing up. Ellen really goes there to see them, to talk to them and their friends. She's just hungry for young life."

I don't think that young people as a rule realize how large a part their happiness, their delight in living, their vitality and exuberance, their plannings, ambitions and their wonderful power of saying "Someday," play in the older folks' lives.

With the eternal selfishness of youth, they seize the stage for themselves, crowding the older generation into the auditorium to be their audience, and then, when they are tired of their own playing, they run lightly away and quite forget that their audience, now grown quite too old and stiff to climb back onto the stage and become actors themselves again, are left to gaze drearily at the dispiriting vacancy of an empty stage.

Now it seems to me that just as the pauper of worldly goods becomes the responsibility of the community and is supplied with the necessities of physical life out of a general store, so the paupers of young life become the responsibility of the community and should be supplied with enough young life to keep them from social starvation, out of the general store.

And I think those who should take charge of this responsibility, who should be the "overseers of the poor" for this kind of poverty, are the young people of the neighbourhood, the "crowd" to which the missing young folks belonged.

I think the sight of any of these empty homes should be a challenge to all the young folks who pass them to "run in" for a few minutes; to carry their own joys and ambitions there as well as into their own homes; to go occasionally to ask for news of the distant ones; and always to carry news there when any comes to them.

I know it's difficult, young folks, for you who cannot help feeling you will always be young to fancy yourself middle aged and absorbed and bound up in other young folks' lives.

And I know its' almost impossible for you to imagine further and see yourself lonesome and depressed because these imaginary beings, having become the centre of your universe, slip lightly away and leave that universe empty.

Nevertheless ,all this is very likely to happen to you some day.

And you'll remember that, won't you, the next time you are passing one of these empty homes that calls to you to come in?

"Church Music, Organs, Organists" Subject Of Address By Rev. J. Rollins

Inspiring and enlightening to a marked degree, was Rev. Mr. Rollins' message to the congregation of St. Andrew's last evening. The pastor took for his text, Genesis 4th chapter, and 21st verse: "Jubal, the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ."

This passage deals with one of the most interesting characters in the Book of Genesis. Dealing with the scriptural passage in a concrete form, the pastor very effectively showed the relative value of music to the church service.

At the outset Mr Rollins pointed out that the Bible arranged people in families in a variety of ways. There was the relationship of father and son according to the flesh, and there was the relationship of father and son according to the spirit, the mind, the imagination, the emotions. Can was Adam's son according to the flesh, but in the moral order Cain was of his father the devil. The devil was a murderer from the beginning, and so was Cain

The Bible gives no record of any children born to Jubal after the flesh, but Jubal out of his melodious soul an dbeautiful imagination begat his harp and his organ. Jubal's progeny grew and multiplied, until at the Red Sea a great host went out after Miriam with timbrel and dance, and the earliest schools of theology the schools of the prophets—music had a large place. But the children of Jubal are to be found in all their glory at the great feasts in the days of Solomon, when as many as four thousand instruments were used at one time in the worship of Jehovah.

The exile and poverty of the people gave a great check to Jubal's children and it was not until Christianity had conquered the Roman Empire that the children of Jubal came back again.

"If I were to attempt to review the whole history of instrumental music in the Christian church," said Mr. Rollins an dto give you one-half the arguments that have been used for and against Jubal's organ, we would not get home in time to lay aside our Sunday clothes and break our fast before going to to-morrow's work Martin Luther and St. Augustine and Jeremy Taylor, and our own fighting forefathers of the last half of the 19th century, and our own fighting selves of the first quarter of the 20th century, all have spoken, and for the most part have spoken unadvisedly and in a temper." It was not without significance that the Lord hath said "To him that ordereth his conversation aright I will show the salvation of God." There was no question on which it would seem to be more difficult for church people to order their conversation aright than on the question of church music and organs and organists and choirs. Though there seemed no the slightest need for the exhortation at the present time Mr. Rollins concluded by expressing the hope that the members and adherents of St .Andrew's would always be given grace and wisdom aright on the subject. If Christian people would love one another and always live at peace, they would be acceptable worshippers, whether with or without the assistance of Jubal and his organ.

Next Sunday evening, Mr. Rollins will preach on "The first Great Preacher"

The Musical Numbers

"The Processional March," an organ number, was beautifully rendered by Mr. Trenner, and was followed by the singing of the anthem.

Miss Olive Howell rendered a solo in her usual effective manner.

"Mediation," an organ number by Mr. Trenner, was a crowning triuhpr. The beautiful strains reverbrated throughout the edifice, and added undisputed testimony to the ability of Mr. Trenner as an organist.

WORKINGMEN DO NOT NEED MR. WEBB'S GUIDANCE

Dear Editor,—In my estimation, the man who cannot think and act for himself, is not the one to make a good citizen, and therefore, the letter which appeared in the Morning Times is not one which appeals to the com*mon sense* of the working man, be he English or Canadian born. Mr. G. S. Webb, in his rhapsodies about Sir James Whitney, forgets that the working men of Peterborough have a capacity for thinking for themselves, and the manner in which Sir James Whitney received the miners of New Ontario just recently, does not give us the idea that he is very much in favour of the workingman. What we want is progress. Has not the Conservative government been at a standstill. Have we, both Canadian and British workingmen not common sense enough to know that to vote for a progressive compensation act, is for our mutual benefit.

In Mr. P. G. S. Webb's letter to The Times, he says most Canadians need no appealing to. In that he is quite right, as the benefits to the workingmen are so few that they do not appeal to him as worthy of thought or consideration. Mr. P. G. S. Webb frequently uses the great personal pronoun, I, and may I now voice the thoughts of many more, in saying that Canadians or English do not require Mr. P. G. S. Webb or British Born to think for them. We, as good citizens, have brains enough to think and act for ourselves. Is Mr. Webb suffering from a large head or an attack of the nerves. I cannot see how he is going to show us the quality of his thoughts in the manner in which he attacks R. R. and the liberals.

The unparliamentary language which he uses, betokens 'hysteria.' What does the 2nd Moses mean? When he says Britishers are as sober and law abiding a class as any other, does he accuse the Liberals of thinking otherwise. Now, I think he is trying to flatter us working men a little. But the British and Canadian workmen have the gift of penetrating behind the meaning of that sentence, and we are not going to be caught by chaff.

Every Canadian Englishman knows the evil of intemperance, and we honour Mr. Rowell's policy, although we may like our glass. We are quite willing that anything which is a stumbling block to others should be removed. Hence the three-fifth clause. Therefore, it is knowing that, the workmen are just as thoughtful of their own sons. We are confident that they have the sense and reason to vote accordingly, and do not require P. G. Webb, as a tutor of reason. He says that the Liberals have a lot of mud to throw. Will our "cradle recollect that the hiding place of Moses was pitched and slimed both inside and out. Does history repeat itself, as his letter in The Times is all mud. I trust when Moses speaks again it will be with the intention of leading his countrymen into a more promising land of thought.

In concluding, let me just remark, Mr. P. G. S. Webb is very previous in stating that the Liberal candidate will not get either British or Canadian men to vote for him. That remains to be proved, as the 11th will show, and the sympathy of P. G. S. Webb may not be required for that date.

Yours respectfully,

JAY DEE.

MOTHER WAS WISE

Built Up Boy's Strength Instead of Giving Cough Syrup.

A lingering cough is a sure sign of weakness in a child, and the sensible thing is to build up the system. Then the cough will disappear.

But if the child has no appetite, then it needs Vinol, which has not a particle of the nasty, greasy smell and taste that make children hate cod liver oil. Vinol is so pleasant they like to take it and it builds them up wonderfully.

Mrs. R. Inza of New York city says, "My little boy had a very bad cough for two months. I did not like to give him cough syrups for many of them are not good for children. But I did give him your delicious cod liver and iron remedy Vinol and one bottle caused his cough to disappear entirely and restored him to health."

We guarantee that Vinol will build up and strengthen weak, pale children and all rundown persons of every age. If it does not do all we claim we give back your money. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WEDDING BELLS

NICHOLLS—BRANCH.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Branch, Manor Brae, Smith, was the scene of a quiet, but very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, when their youngest daughter, Maria, was united in marriage to Albert Kenneth Nichols of Bridgenorth. As the bridal party entered the drawing room, Miss Cora Bradburn of Peterborough played Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The ceremony was performed under an artistically draped arch, the Rev. J. R. Bonner officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, was wearing a lovely gown of gobelin blue silk, trimmed with embroidered chiffon and long net veil held with a coronet of orange blossoms. The two little flower girls, Mildred and Marion Van Sickle, twin nieces of the bride, who did their part so well, were in cream lingerie frocks, carrying a basket of pink and white carnations. The ceremony was followed by an elaborate wedding dinner, at which about forty guests took part.

Many very beautiful and valuable presents were received, the gift of the groom being a handsome mink muff, and to the flower girls a gold bracelet each. The bride's going away gown was of brown broadcloth with hat to match. The happy couple will be with friends for a couple of weeks, after which they will reside at Kawartha View, Bridgenorth.

The bride will be at home to her friends on December 20th and 21st.

Maligne Lake On The G.T.P.

Letter received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway headquarters from one of the prominent artists of New York, who has just returned from a trip over the Grand Trunk Pacific as far as the Canadian Rockies, contains the following:

"I went out to the end of steel on the Grand Trunk Pacific, then took the trail over to Maligne Lake, which I found to be the most beautiful lake I ever saw in my life. I had a delightful trip, and made several sketches. Returning I stopped off at Wainwright, and from there went out duck shooting in different directions, and had a most delightful time. Next year I hope to be able to get away earlier and see more of your magnificent country."

BREWING INTERESTS WON'T BANISH THE BAR

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I observe that Mr Peck, the Conservative candidate, has taken notice of my communication regarding his being a director of the Calcutt Brewing Company, and answers by stating that he is solicitor for the Company. Mr. Peck denies what I did not make any complaint about. My contention and my statement simply amounted to this—that the people of Wes Peterborough interested in temperance, cannot expect any assistance from a temperance standpoint, from one who is so closely identified with a brewing company, whose business is to make and sell all the intoxicating drink possible. And we temperance people cannot expect from Mr. Peck, as one interested in a brewing company and supporter of a government opposed to advanced temperance legislation, the warm support that our cause needs. Then it is not enough for Mr. Peck to brush away his responsibility in the matter by simply saying that he has $100 worth of stock in trust. The fact is, that Mr. Peck is sufficiently interested in the company to be a director, and he is bound to get as much beer into the country as possible in the interests of the company, and I and other temperance people are interested in seeing that there is as little beer as possible made, sol daad drunk. I simply wisheto pointout that it was not in the interests of temperance reform to have West Peterborough represented by a director of a brewing company, whose interests would be all in favour of the traffic which we, in the interests of our homes and families and the community are trying to wipe out and banish the bar.

Yours truly,

ANXIOUS PARENT.

MR. PECK, THE S.O.E. AND ORANGEMEN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you let me have a little space to reply to Mr. Peck's reference to my letter of a day or two ago. I pointed out that Mr. Peck left the Sons of England Society because of their marching to church with the Orangemen. That was all I had to say and Mr. Peck in his letter to the Examiner in reply, does not deny the statement. How can he expect Orangemen to vote for him if he is ashamed to walk with them when they march with the Society he was connected with, which in general stands for the same principles as the Orangemen?

Yours sincerely,

BRIDGENORTH, DEC. 2—The village is very quiet at present, as most of the men are in the lumber camps.

Mr. R. R. Hall held a political meeting on Thursday night, which was well attended. Everything looks favourable for Mr. Hall.

Bridgenorth sports the largest skating rink in the country. The whole of Lake Chemong is covered with about two inches of fine smooth ice and the young folks are having a fine time at night. They have a large bonfire and skate around the fire.

It is understood that Miss Martin, the popular local school teacher, has been engaged for another year. It would be a mistake to let Miss Martin go.

A Sunday Morning Visit to St. Paul's Presbyterian Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

"The Evangelization of the World in this Generation" was the theme of the service at St. Paul's last Sunday morning. It was missionary from beginning to end. Rev. D. A. Macdonald, B.A., the young man who has been chosen to represent them in the foreign field, made his bow to the congregation, and if this service is any criterion of the meetings to be held during the week, St. Paul's ought to be proud of their representative.

A young man of splendid physique, unassuming in gesture, dignified in delivery, stood before his newly-adopted people, and in a most humble manner, expressed his pleasure in being chosen to represent St. Paul's church. One could see he was not accustomed to flights of oratory savouring of egotism, for he showed signs of nervousness, but when he came to his sermon there was no mistaking the fact that the missionary spirit—the thirst for souls—had taken possession of his every faculty.

While introducing the young missionary to the congregation, Dev. Mr. Pogue made reference to the fact that Sunday was the fourth anniversary of his coming as their pastor. They had been four of the busiest years of his life, and he was glad to say, four of the happiest. In making these personal references he assured his congregation he did not want to draw attention to himself, but to the Master, whom he served. He felt encouraged that their labour together had not been in vain, this great forward movement in missions being a fitting climax, a happy coincidence on his anniversary day.

The missionary spirit of a church may be taken as the thermometer indicating the true religious life of its people in all departments.

Seeing an item in the local papers announcing the special character of the services, I determied to visit St. Paul's and see her at her best. The morning was clear, but cold, too cold no doubt for a number, who find it too hot in summer to attend the means of grace, judging by the number of empty seats.

St. Paul's always possessed a peculiar charm for me, ever since the days of my childhood when I used to toddle at the side of my grandmother, as we wended our way to the First Presbyterian Church, as it was then called.

Well do I remember the service of song without organ or choir. The Precentor, with tuning fork in hand, would slowly arise, after the announcement of each hymn, strike the fork on the seat in front, jerk it quickly to his ear, hum a couple of chords, of the "Doh, Ray, Me" type, and, with solemn dignity, "raise the tune". Then, without any seeming haste, the congregation would stand up and join heartily in the singing of the hymn. In those days the Doxology was not chanted in English Church style, but every member joined in repeating it in unison with their reverend pastor, Rev. Mr. Roger.

St. Paul's did not then possess the "wings" (which, no doubt, gave her the privilege of being canonized), but the church walls stood where the pillars now stand, a gallery running along the two sides and across the end.

What changes have taken place since then?

To-day, St. Paul's is up-to-date in almost every respect, having all the accessories that go to make up the equipment of a modern church. The pipe organ was lately remodelled, being now of the pneumatic type, having a three manual console placed in such a position that the organist faces the choir, who, in turn, sit in front of the pulpit. The organ possesses a sweet tone, being particularly adapted to solo work, lacking that harshness so characteristic of the ordinary organ. Then, under the skilful manipulation of the organist, Mr. Crane, who has a delicate and sympathetic touch, the charm of the musical part of the services is greatly enhanced. Assisting him is an excellent choir, gowned in black, the ladies having an extra adornment for their heads, in the shape of "mortar boards."

The young people are given a chance to assume responsibility in the management of the Church. The offertory is taken up by young men. In fact, the churches of the twentieth century are beginning to realize that great things are being accomplished by young men.

A perusal of the annual report of the Church shows a healthy condition not only in spiritual work, but in finances.

The summary at the ed of the booklet states that these people raised last year, approximately $20,000. Of this amount they spent on themselves about $12,000, (a large part being devoted to the new manse). The people of St. Paul's are not at all parsimonious in dealing with those who labour for them, their pastor being the best paid clergyman in the city; while for the service of praise they allot over $1,100.

The straitment accorded a stranger is all that could be desired. As I entered the main doorway, I noticed on my right, a plan representing the seating capacity of the church, round headed brass tacks being used to indicate the members. The main floor seemed to be pretty well "tacked" so I journey upward to the gallery, taking a seat in the front row. The young lady who sat next, proffered two hymn-books, one for myself and one for my consort. At the close of the service we were greeted by the owner of the pew and given a hearty invitation to visit St. Paul's again, and come to their seat.

While I use the term, "owner" I may explain that the seats are not rented, being simply allotted to the church members, during the pleasure of the officials, who request the holders to extend a hearty welcome to visitors. At the evening service all seats are free.

The expenses of the Church, as well as all special funds are raised by the free-will offerings of the people contributed through the medium of envelopes.

The missionary givings have been about $5.00 per member, and the Presbyterian Church of Canada, in their splendid endeavour to reach the million mark, have asked St. Paul's to contribute $5,000 as their share. A special appeal was made, and the call met with such a hearty response they are confident of raising $6,000. part of which will be applied to the support of their own missionary, Rev. Mr. Macdonald, who leaves shortly for Korea. During this week he will address the various organizations of the Church. Tuesday night a banquet will be given to about three hundred men of the congregation, who will be addressed by prominent missionary workers, the chief being Mr. E. A. Armstrong of Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Macdonald took as his text the last few verses of the 28th Chapter of Matthew, the command being: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations".

In discussing the foreign missionary situation and its great maznitude, he pointed out the worldwide opportunity which presents itself to the Christians of this generation which never existed before. The Disciples, in their day, faced almost insumountable obstacles. Until quite recently, all heathen nations were closed to the Christian religion. In Japan, fifty years ago, notices were put up forbidding the preaching of Christ; and, even in Korea, not more than twenty-five years ago, the following sign was posted everywhere: "If you see a foreigner kill him, if you allow a foreigner to pass by you are a traitor to your country."

Now, every nation is open to the religion of Christ, many lands clamouring for men. The fault will lie at our door if the world is not evangelized in this generation.

While the opportunities are great, there are likewise great dangers, dangers that usually accompany the march of western civilization. This he illustrated very nicely by alluding to a story told by Sherwood Eddy, Y.M.C.A. Secretary of Asia, who, while visiting a town in the interior of India, where no Missionary had ever gone, but where other evidences of western civilization had made their inroads, observed three little girls engaged in a game they called "Christian." One had a club and hid in a doorway; the other two came reeling down the street, as if drunk, and were promptly arrested by the little one in hiding, who was playing the role of policeman. What a stigma against our boasted civilization!

Another point to which he made special reference was the great awakening that was taking place in the churches at home; more people are interested in missionary work than ever before. The churches, all working as a unit, are approaching the matter in a systematic way, their object being the evangelization of the world in the present generation. Mr Macdonald pointed out the difference between Christianizing and evangelizing, the latter meaning the presentation of the gospel in an intelligent form to all people, so that if they do not become Christianized the responsibility will be on their own souls.

He asked if it was possible or reasonable to expect the present generation of Christians to reach the present generation of heathen, when only one-third had been evangelized in the past two thousand years; which meant that the other two-thirds must be appealed to in the short space of thirty years. On the face it seemed an impossibility, but by the use of a convincing array of figures, printed on large sheets of paper, the speaker was easily able to demonstrate the possibility of doing so.

One matter to which he referred with special emphasis, was the lack of duplication, of waste, in the foreign field, not like the conditions that stare us in the face at home. If ever there will be an argument for Church Union, which in its sheer greatness will overcome all petty points of theology and sundry isms, it will be this wonderful demonstration which is taking place among the heathen nations of the world, of "one field, one church."

The point that pleased me most during the sermon, was the reference made by Mr. Macdonald to the work being done by John R. Mott, the man who has influenced more young men than any other man living, who is the most widely-known figure in the academic life of five continents, and who to-day is the leading force in aggressive Christianity. He is the Kitchener of the Lord's army.

He is a dreamer; a dreamer who make his dreams come true. He is the field marshal of Christendom, and nearly ever section of the Christian church accepts his leadership.

Honoured for his services in planning and extending the active Christian work of university students; deviser of the World's Christian Student Federation; traveller over four continents in search of room to work; a man of deep consecration, he is a new Crusader, bent on the Christian conquest of the world.

A man who is called to stand before kings; a man trusted by the Chinese Government, and officials, as no other foreigner is trusted; a man who, when he wanted to raise a million dollars in a hurry for educational work in the East, had the White House placed at his disposal by President Taft, where representatives men met him, and, after listening to his appeal, quickly supplied the amount.

Such is the calibre of the man who says the world can be conquered in a generation, if Christians will put their brains, and time, and money, and prayers into the task.

The old conception of a missionary was the bearded variety with silk hat and green umbrella, preaching to a handful of barbarians, under a palm tree. In this place, due chiefly to the efforts of John D. Mott, you must put an army of specialists from our best universities—doctors, civil and electrical engineers, nurses and men representing our best manhood fresh from the college halls, of which Mr. Macdonald is a splendid example.

Mr. Mott stands before the students of the universities all over the world, challenging them, daring them, by setting a task that will drain their every energy, and consume their last ounce of energy. He offers pain, privation, blood, death, victory. Mott holds that the best manhood will always respond to a programme like that.

Little wonder that during the singing of the last hymn not a few eyes were moist as the people realized the sacrifices that must be made by the young man before them, as he voluntarily isolated himself from all that is near and dear, to take up his great life work among the heathen of Korea.

"When they reach the land of strangers,
And the prospect dark appears;
Nothing seen but toils and dangers,
Nothing felt but doubts and fears;
Be Thou with them,
Hear their sighs, count their tears."

RESULTS OF NOMINATIONS

Seventeen Acclamations Reported in Provincial Fight

WHITNEY HAS AN OPPONENT

Toronto, Dec. 5.—Seventeen Conservatives elected by acclamation and no Liberals appear for five of the Toronto seats and Dufferin. This is the net result of the nominations for the Legislature which took place throughout Ontario on Monday. There are 106 seats in the Legislature.

Of the eight seats in Toronto, Labor candidates are contesting seven and only three Liberals are making the run. The Liberals are Joseph Oliver in North Toronto (B), Dr. John Hunter in West Toronto (A), and E. Fielding in South Toronto (B).

Four Cabinet Minister are re-elected without a contest, namely: Hon. Adam Beck, London; Hon. A. J. Matheson, South Lanark; Hon. W. H. Hearst, Sault Ste. Marie; and Hon. James Duff, West Simcoe.

Sir James Whitney, the Prime Minister, does not win his seat without a fight. At the last minute, R. S. Muir, a Toronto lawyer, bobbed up at Winchester Springs, and entered the contest.

The Opposition leader, N. W. Rowell, K.C., who is running in North Oxford, is opposed by Robert Lockhart. In West Kent, George Sulman is opposed by E. Hea, who is called an Independent Liberal.

Here and there in the list will be found a Socialist candidate who perhaps regards the opportunity as favorable for the spread of the society's propaganda.

The following Conservatives are elected by acclamation: Addington, W. D. Black; Carleton, R. McElroy; East Durham, J. J. Preston; Grenville, G. Ferguson; East Hastings, Sandy Grant; North Hastings, Robt. Cook; West Hastings, W. Johnston; Kingston, Dr. Ross; North Lanark, Dr. Preston; South Lanark, Hon. Mr. Matheson; Lincoln, Dr. Jessop; London, Hon. A. Beck; North Renfrew, E. A. Dunlop; South Renfrew, T. McGarry; Sault Ste. Marie, Hon. Mr. Hearst; West Simcoe, Hon. J. Duff; South Simcoe, A. Ferguson; East Victoria, R. M. Mason.

New York, Dec. 5.—In behalf of the National Erectors' Association, which employed Wm. J. Burns to run down the McNamaras in the dynamite outrages, Walter Drew, as counsel, issued a statement here last night urging that the prisoners "make a frank and full confession." Mr. Drew says among other things that he doubts the sincerity of labor's demands in urging extreme punishment in the name of justice, and indicates rather that those who take that attitude have an ulterior motive. Mr. Drew issued the statement in the form of a telegram to J. B. Fredericks, district attorney at Los Angeles. The telegram is as follows:

"Captain J. D. Fredericks, district attorney, Los Angeles:—

"I note the many statements from labor leaders repudiating the McNamaras and demanding the infliction upon them of the extreme penalty of the law.' As you know, I am counsel for a group of employers who have been among the chief sufferers at the hands of these men and am, perhaps, as familiar as anyone with the series of dynamite outrages in which they took part. I deem it my duty to say to you, in order that in your discretion you may advise the court:

"First—No human life has been destroyed by any other explosion traceable to these men, nor do I know of any such explosion which was apparently planned with the purpose of taking life, though in some instances a disregard of such possible consequences was shown.

"Second—The National Erectors' Association does not join in the demand for the death penalty for the younger McNamara, believing him the weak, paid tool of others and his actions the natural consequence of the doctrines taught by men who now repudiate him. We believe the punishment of both these brothers secondary in importance to the conviction of the men behind them and we sincerely hope they will take advantage of the opportunity now presented to perform a signal service for society by making full and frank confession.

"Third—Inasmuch as some of the demands for extreme punishment come from men who must have known of the guilt of the McNamaras and one of them, at least, I know to be implicated in several outrages with them, I sincerely doubt that such demands are being made with the sole desire of aiding the ends of full and complete justice.

(Signed) "Walter Drew."

Mr. Drew reiterated last evening that he believed that between twenty and thirty labor leaders would be indicted as the result of the federal investigation now under way at Indianapolis, and that the ramifications of the inquiry would extend from Boston to the Pacific Coast. As to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, he would say nothing other than to repeat what he had said during the day—that, so far as he knew, Mr. Gompers had no knowledge of the dynamiting and no advance information that the McNamaras were to plead guilty.

100 Explosions to Probe.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 5.—"Some persons that have apparently been so astounded by the pleas of guilty of the McNamara brothers at Los Angeles may soon be still further amazed," said a representative of one of the employers' organizations watching the federal probe here into the alleged nation-wide dynamiting conspiracy yesterday.

"No one at all informed believed the McNamaras were alone in operations that covered one hundred explosions from coast to coast and cost an enormous sum of money."

Accountants and stenographers that proceeded yesterday with examinations of records and correspondence of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, in the federal grand jury chambers, were seeking evidence, it was learned, as to the exact disposition of certain funds of the association. According to the information compiled by the National Erectors' Association one hundred explosions directed against employers of non-union iron workers occurred between August, 1905, and December, 1910, in many states and it is the details of the organization and the financing arrangements involved that the United States authorities seek to uncover.

Specifically, the federal inquiry is as to whether or not the statute governing inter-state transportation of dynamite has been violated, but since the visit to this city yesterday of Detective William J. Burns, it is intimated that prosecutions on more serious charges may follow if the federal grand jury returns indictments against men alleged to have been "higher up" in the McNamara conspiracy.

Plans further to disclose the identity of these persons were formulated by Mr. Burns and U. S. District Attorney Charles W. Miller yesterday, and to-day operatives in the employ of Burns and the National Erectors' Association are active in several quarters of the investigation here.

Tell Their Stories To-day.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 5.—James B. and John J. McNamara will appear before the federal grand jury here today and tell their stories. They will go before that body immediately after having been sentenced by Judge Walter Bordwell. This declaration was made late last night on unimpeachable authority.

The moment sentence is pronounced, according to plans completed last night, the brothers will be served with a summons to appear before the federal inquisitorial body.

The decision reached by the McNamaras is regarded here as of vast importance. If there is a gigantic dynamiting conspiracy, which is what the grand jury wants to know about, the state last night was convinced that to-day's developments will place on record the name of every man connected with it. With this information, it is believed, the work of federal grand juries here and in Indianapolis will be comparatively simple.

LOAN IS MUDDLED.

China Is Having a Bad Time Raising More Money.

Pekin, Dec. 5.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai is having great difficulty with the board of finance. He appointed a president to the board, who declined to serve. The vice-president left Pekin after informing his friends that the situation was hopeless. The acting president has now asked for a leave of absence on the ground of illness, but really because he was summoned before the National Assembly.

Considerable of a sensation has been caused by the discovery that the National Assembly, the Chinese Foreign Board and the board of finance hold three different texts of the $30,000,000 loan agreement, negotiated by Baron Cottu in behalf of a Franco-Belgian syndicate. This was discovered, it was said, when a representative of the Chinese Foreign Board appeared before the National Assembly in secret session. It is on this loan that China's future form of government practically depends.

A despatch from Tien Tsin says that the Chilli provincial assembly has telegraphed to the French Government protesting against the Cottu loan and declaring that the National Assembly's action with respect to this loan is illegal.

A message has also been sent to Pekin declaring that the Chilli assembly had decided to withdraw its representatives from the National Assembly which now musters few beyond the appointees of the throne. Sessions of the National House are being held with about one-third the total members in attendance.

Consular advices say that the three days' armistice at Wuchang terminates to-morrow morning, but that it probably will be renewed. Delegates from the rebel provinces are arriving at Wuchang and Yuan Shi Kai's representatives are already there.

Four Millions In Berlin.

Berlin, Dec. 5.—The council of the "Four million" city of Greater Berlin, whose formation was approved by the Prussian Diet on May 16 last, held its first meeting yesterday. Plans were discussed for the future development of the city, which now includes all the suburban municipalities, making Berlin the third largest city of the world, ranking after London and New York. The names of candidates for the post of director of the council were also considered. He will be the executive head, with the direction of all municipal affairs.

Q. What is astigmatism of the eye?
A. Astigmatism is an uneven curvature of the eye and causes a double focus. As the eye always strives for clear vision, this double focus annoys the brain, and causes headache and nervousness. We make lenses called cylinders to correct astigmatism.
Q. What causes double vision?
A. Double vision is caused by the eye not being in line, that is, one may turn up or have a tendency to do so, or both may turn in, a weak muscular system is the cause, a weak nervous system is back of it all.

We would be pleased to have you call and let us fully explain how such conditions can be relieved by glasses.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—The bill introduced by Hon. 300 Horses Burned.

Jersey City, N. Y., Dec. 5.—Fire early yesterday swept the plant of the United States Express Co. here. Stables and other buildings occupying nearly a full city block were burned, 200 wagons and auto trucks were destroyed and 300 horses perished. Two firemen were seriously injured before the blaze was under control at 4.45 o'clock. The loss will probably reach $400,000.

QUALITY, SKILL, & CARE,
THE LADDER BY WHICH WE CLIMB
To Those Requiring Glasses

Eight years is a short time in the life of man, but it is a period of sufficient length, in business, to carry with it a guarantee of honest effort and satisfaction.

For this number of years I have carried on an Optical business in this city and I have fitted thousands of people with glasses. The fact that I have been successful leads me to believe that my methods are right and for that reason, I wish to give you the additional assurance that there will be no change in them in the future. I am in a position to give you the best of everything that means eye comfort.

It is barely possible that you are in need of new lenses, frame or an eyeglass and I would ask that you give me the privilege of giving your eyes a scientific examination and of providing the glasses for you if you need them.

I exercise the greatest care in the examination and fitting of the glasses. I do not overlook the feature of making glasses which will add greatly to the personal appearance of those who wear them. In other words, every detail will have my most careful consideration.

I carry the largest up-to-date Optical Stock in Peterboro, and grind all my own lenses. You will incur no obligation by calling and consulting with me.

Two Minute Talks About

PANDORA RANGE

for Coal or Wood

HAVE you seen the Perfect Spring Door on the warming closet? It is the newest Pandora feature.

The ordinary door, when opened, is inside the warming closet and takes up valuable space.

But the Perfect Spring Door, when opened, is entirely outside of the warming closet. By being outside it adds two inches to the height of the space inside the closet. That extra space provides room for fourteen more dinner or dessert plates. The door cannot drop down and smash the dishes because the spring holds the door up out of the way until you desire to close it.

The Perfect Spring Door is a convenience worth having. There are more than a score of other conveniences on the Pandora. Our Pandora booklet tells about them. Send for a copy.

"THE AVENGER"

BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"In what way?" Wrayson asked.

For the first time, Madame de Melbain glanced a little nervously about her. Against listeners, however, they seemed absolutely secure. There was no hiding place, nor any one within sight. Upon the land was everywhere the silence of a great heat. Even in the shade where they sat, the still air was hot and breathless. Down in the valley, the cows stood knee-deep in tht stream, and a blue haze hung over the vineyards.

"Nearly eighteen months ago," Madame de Melbain continued, "I received a letter signed by the name of Morris Barnes. The writer said that he had just arrived from South Africa and had picked up on one of the battlefields there a bundle of letters, which he had come to the conclusion must have been written by me. He did not mince matters in the least. He was a blackmailer pure and simple. He had given me the first chance of buying these letters! What was my offer?"

A sharp ejaculation broke from Wrayson's lips. Louise signed to him to be silent.

"Amy was with me when the letters came," Madame de Melbain continued. "She left at once for England to see this man. The sum he demanded was impossible. All that she could do was to ask for time, and to arrange to pay him so much a month whilst we were considering how to raise the money. He accepted this, and promised to keep silence. He kept his word, but for a time only. He made inquiries, and he seems to have come to the conclusion that the money was on the other side. At any rate, he approached the advisers of my husband. He was in treaty with them for the letttrs—when he—when he met with his death!"

Wrayson had a feeling that the heat was becoming intolerable. He dared not look at Louise. His eyes were fixed upon the still expressionless face of the woman whose story was slowly unfolding its tragic course.

"A rumour of this," Madame de Melbain continued, "reached us in Mexonia! I telegraphed to Amy! She and Louise were at their wits' end. Louise decided to go and see this man Barnes, to make her way, if she could, into his flat, to search for, and if she could find them, to steal these letters. She carried out her purpose. The rest you know, for it was you who saved her!"

"The man," Wrayson said hoarsely, "was murdered."

Madame de Melbain inclined her head.

"So I have understood," she remarked.

"He was murdered," Wrayson continued in a harsh, unnatural voice, "on that very night, the night when he was to have made over these letters to your—enemies! The message was telephoned to me! He was to go to the Hotel Francis. He was warned that there was danger. And there was! He was murdered—while the cab waited—to take him there!"

Her eyes held his—she did not flinch.

"The man who telephoned to me, Bentham—his name was, the agent of your enemies—he, too, was murdered!"

"So I have heard," she said calmly.

"The letters!" he faltered. "Where are they?"

"No one knows," she answered. "That is why I live always on the brink of a volcano. Many people are searching for them. No one as yet has succeeded. But that may come at any moment."

"Madame," he said, "can you tell me who killed these men?"

She raised her eyebrows.

"I cannot,' she answered coldly.

"Madame," he declared, "the man Barnes was a pitiful blackmailing little Jew! For all I know, he deserved death a dozen times over—ay, and Bentham, too! But the law does not look upon it like that. Whoever killed these men will assuredly be hanged if they are caught. Don't you think that your friends are a little too zealous?"

She met his gaze unflinchingly.

If friends of mine have done these things," she said, "they are at least unknown to me!"

He drew a short choking breath of relief. Yet even now the mystery was deeper than ever! He began to think out aloud.

"A friend of yours it must have been," he declared. "Barnes was murdered when in a few hours he would have parted with those letters to your enemies; Bentham was murdered when he was on the point of dscovering them! There is some one working for you, guarding you, who desires to remain unknown. I wonder!"

He stopped short. A sudden illumining idea flashed through his mind. He looked at Madame de Melbain fixedly.

"This man Duncan who has disappeared so suddenly," he said thickly. "Whom did you say—who was it that he reminded you of?"

Madame de Melbain lost at last her composure. She was white to the lips, her eyes seemed suddenly lit with a horrible dread. She pushed out her hands as though to thrust it from her.

"He was killed!" she cried. "It was not he! He is dead! Don't dare to speak of anything so horrible!"

Then before they could realize that he was actually amongst them, he was there. They heard only a crashing of boughs, the parting of the hedge. He was there on his knees, with his arms around the terrified woman who had sobbed out his name. Louise, too, swayed upon her feet, her fascinated eyes fixed upon the newcomer. Wrayson understood, then, that in some way this man had indeed come back from the dead.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The intervention which a few seconds later abruptly terminated an emotional crisis, was in itself a very commonplace one. Monsieur, the proprietor deemed the moment advisable for solving a question which was beginning to distract his better half in the kitchen. He advanced towards them, all smiles and bows and gestures.

"Monsieur would pardon his inquiring—would Monsieur and the ladies be taking dejeuner? A fowl of excellence unusual was then being roasted, the salad—Monsieur could see it growing! And Madame had thought of an omelette. There was no cooler place in all France on a day of heat so extraordinary as the table under the trees yonder. And as for strawberries — well, Monsieur could see them grow for himself! Or if it was fraises de Bois that Madame preferred, the children had brought in baskets full only that morning, fresh and juicy, and of a wonderful size."

Wrayson interrupted him at last.

"Let luncheon be served as you suggest," he directed. "In the meantime——"

Monsieur Jules understood and withdrew with more bows and smiles. The significance of his brief appearance upon the lawn was a thing of which he had not the least idea. Yet after his departure, the strain to a certain extent had passed away. Only Madame de Melbain's eyes seemed scarcely to leave the face of the man who stood still by her chair.

"Alive!" she murmured, grasping his hand in hers. "You alive!"

Louise had taken his other hand. He was imprisoned between the two.

"Yes!" he said. "I made what they called a wonderful recovery. I suppose it was almost a miracle."

"But your death," Louise declared, "was never contradicted."

"A good deal of news went astray about that time," he remarked grimly. "I was left, and forgotten. When I found what had been done, I let it go. It seemed to me to be better. I went up to Rhodesia, and of course I had the devil's luck. I've come back to Europe simply because I couldn't stand it any longer. I was not coming to England, and I had no idea of seeing you, Emilie! I travelled here on a little pilgrimage."

"It was fate," she murmured.

"But since I am here," he continued, "and since we have met again, I must ask you this. Your husband is trying to divorce you?"

"Yes!" she murmured.

"And why?"

"Because he is a brute," she answered quietly. "We have been separated for more than a year. I think that he wants to marry again."

"And you permit this?" he asked.

"No!" she answered. "I contest it. Up to now, the courts have been in my favour."

"Up to now! They must always be in your favour!" he declared vehemently. "What can they say against a saint like you?"

She smiled up at him tenderly, a little wistfully.

"They would say a good deal," she whispered, "if they could see you here now."

He drew abruptly away.

"I am a thoughtless brute," he declared. "It was for that I decided to remain dead. I will go away at once."

Her fingers closed over his. She drew him a little nearer with glad recklessness.

"You shall not,' she murmured. "It is worth a little risk, this."

Wrayson touched Louise on the arm and they turned away. He found her a seat in a quiet corner of the fruit garden, where a tall row of hollyhocks shielded them from observation. She was very white, and in a semi-hysterical state.

"I can't believe," she said, "that that is really Duncan—Duncan himself. It is too wonderful!"

"There is no doubt about it being your brother," he answered. "What I don't quite understand is why he has kept away so long."

"It is because of her," she answered. "If they had been on the same continent I believe that nothing could have kept them apart!"

"And now?" he asked.

"I cannot tell," she answered, "I, nor any one else! God made them for one another, I am very sure!"

He took her hand and held it tightly in his.

"And you for me, dearest,' he whispered. "Shall I tell you why I am sure of it?"

She leaned back with half-closed eyes. Endurance has its limits, and the mesmeric influence of the drowsy summer day was in her veins.

"If you like," she murmured simply . . .

And only a few yards away, the man from the dead and the woman who had loved him seemed to have drifted into a summer day-dream. The strangeness of this thing held them both — ordinary intercourse seemed impossible. What they spoke about they scarcely knew! There were days, golden days to be whispered about and lived again; treasured minutes to be recalled, looks and words remembered. Of the future, of the actual present, save of their two selves, they scarcely spoke. It was an hour snatched from Paradise for her! She would not let it go lightly. She would not suffer even a cloud to pass across it!

In time, Monsieur Jules found himself constrained to announce that dejeuner was served. He found it useless to try to attract the attention of either Madame de Melbain or Duncan, so he went in search of Wrayson.

"Monsieur is served," he announced, looking blandly upwards at a passing cloud. "There remains the wine only."

"Chablis of the best, and ice, and mineral water," Wrayson ordered. "Come, Louise."

She sighed a little as she rose and followed him along the narrow path, where the rose bushes brushed against her shirt, and the air was fragrant with lavender. It had been an interlude only, after all, though the man whose hand she still held would never have admitted it. But—he did not know! She prayed to Heaven that he never might.

Luncheon, after all, with a waiter within hearing, and Monsieur Jules hovering round, banished in a great measure the curious sense of unreality from which none of them were wholly free. And when coffee came, Madame leaned a little towards Duncan, and with her hand upon his arm whispered a question.

"My letters, Duncan! What became of them?"

He sighed.

"I was a little rash, perhaps," he said, "but they were all I had left. They were with me at Colenso, in an envelope, sealed and addressed, to be burnt unopened. When I was hit, I got a Red Cross man to cut them out of my coat and destroy them."

"Madame de Melbain looked at him for a moment, and her eyes were soft with unshed tears. Then she turned away, though her hand still rested upon his.

"Duncan," she said quietly, "don't think that I mind. You did all that you could, and indeed I would rather that you cared so much. But the letters were not destroyed."

For a moment he failed to realize the import of her words.

"Not destroyed?" he repeated, a little vaguely.

"No!" she answered. "They came into the hands of some one in London. Terrible things have happened in connection with them. Duncan, if you will listen to me quietly, I will tell you about it. Sit down, dear."

She saw the gathering storm. The man's face was black with anger. He was still a little dazed, however.

"You mean—that the man to whom I trusted them——"

"He kept them for his own purpose," she said softly. "Don't look like that, Duncan. He has paid his debt. He is dead!"

"And the letters?"

"We do not know. My husband's advisers are trying to get possession of them. That is why the courts have not yet pronounced their judgment."

He had risen to his feet, but she drew him gently down again.

"Remember, Duncan, that the man is dead! Be calm, and I will tell you all about it."

He looked at her wonderingly.

"You are not angry with me?"

Teacher Cured of Barber's Itch

Tells of Cures Among His Pupils That Were Remarkable

Raw, Inflamed, Itching Skin is Soothed and Healed by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Barber's Itch is a form of Ringworm, which, when once started, is most annoying and unsightly, and most difficult to cure. Barbers often refuse to shave anyone having this disease, for fear of passing it on to other customers.

But you can cure Barber's Itch and keep the skin wonderfully soft, and healthy by applying Dr. Chase's Ointment. Just read what this teacher has to say about the healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Chas. C. Poirier, Upper Caraquet, N. B., writes: "Two years ago while teaching at Shippegan I caught Barber's Itch. A friend told me Dr. Chase's Ointment would cure me, as it had him. When I went for a box I thought it dear, but when I found how good it was I thought it cheap.

"Not only was I cured by that single box, but it also cured two of my pupils, and this too quickly to be believed. One of them, a girl, had a running sore on the chin, which the doctor had tried in vain to cure. The other had a sore on the ear; water running out of it all the time. I can certify to the cure of these cases."

Wherever there is itching skin or a sore that refuses to heal you can apply Dr. Chase's Ointment with positive assurance that the results will be entirely satisfactory. The soothing, healing power of this great ointment is truly wonderful. 60c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

"Say, Doctor, what you suppose ails me, anyway?

"Tea? Why, I've drank it 20 years, say Doc, quit chaffin', I'm feeling bad.

"Now there goes another of those infernal twists in my right side.

"Tea congests the liver, you say? So I've got to quit. Well, what do you know about this Postum?

(A month later) "Mornin' Doc, yes feeling fine, thanks. Say, you did give me a scare about my liver, but it was all true, I reckon.

"When I quit the tea and went on with Postum, I began to feel better in two days and now I've quit the army of tea cranks for good.

"Sure, I belong to the Postum army, and know where my comfort is."

Why Don't You Drink Coffee?

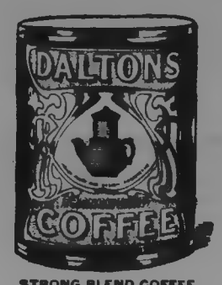
Is it because ordinary Coffee does not agree with you?
Or because you can't stand the taste of boiled Coffee?
Or because you find ordinary Coffee too expensive?

Order 2 tins of Dalton's French Drip Coffee at 50c. a tin and your grocer will send you, FREE, this French Drip Coffee Pot worth $1.30

A cup of Dalton's French Drip Coffee—made in a Dalton French Drip Coffee Pot—is the most appetizing, wholesome, delicious beverage in the world. This is because Dalton's Coffee is so different.

MILD BLEND COFFEE

Instead of roasting Coffee in a cylinder, over a slow fire (which drives out much of the flavor) we throw the Coffee through an intensely hot flame, which roasts it so quickly that the volatile oils and rich flavor are held captive in the berry. A strong air-blast cools the freshly roasted Coffee and also blows away any dust, or chaff. The Coffee is then ground and another air-blast drives off the inner coat or shell of the berry. It is the inner coat—tough, indigestible and laden with Tannic Acid—that makes ordinary Coffee bitter and gives you headaches and indigestion when you drink it.



STRONG BLEND COFFEE

Dalton's French Drip Coffee is free of tannin and tough fibre. This is why you can drink Dalton's French Drip Coffee for every meal, every day, and be all the better for it.

It gives you all the good of the Coffee—the fragrance, satisfaction, deliciousness of the finest Coffee in the world. It will agree with you, even though you cannot drink ordinary Coffee.

If you enjoy the flavor of a rich cup of Coffee—if you would drink it in preference to any other beverage if it agreed with you—just try this new and better Coffee—

WOMEN IN GLASS HOUSES

You know the old saying, "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones," which, being interpreted, means that only those who have no faults should speak of the faults of others.

So when Mrs Neat Housekeeper says virtuously of Mrs Leisure Lover, "My dear, you should see her apartment, the dust in the corners—she must be very sure that Mrs Leisure Lover cannot fling the counter criticism—I should die in her closely shut rooms. There isn't any air or sunshine—she thinks so much of everything that she isn't sanitary."

Now Mrs Neat Housekeeper does not dream that her immaculate glass house will be shattered by such a cobble stone of comment but there it is all broken bits and sharp edges.

And there is Margaret, who whispers of Mazie:

"She was out on the lake until 1 o'clock last night unchaperoned. I waited up to be sure of the time."

And Mazie, youthfully indiscreet, but of unsullied thought, shrinks from Margaret's confidences.

She has such a suspicious mind, she thinks everybody is bad—false, or frivolous—as the public she throws against the page.

Or when Bertie, fresh from fraternity honors, snubs Jones, who is working his way through college, the shot from his sling leaves its own glass walls shaped without crash. And his complacency would be considerably shaken if he could hear Jones's quiet:

"I bite, sonny. My grandfather was a gentleman when his grandfather ate kid boots."

This it goes on. A hitting at B, and B hitting back, until there is general havoc.

It will always be a source of argument as to just how far our gossip about others should extend. Not to talk of people would seem stale, flat and unprofitable! Half of our interest in life comes from the discussion of neighbourly happenings—and of the faults and foibles of our fellow men. Mary's gowns, Jane's servants, Mr. Potter's millions, Mrs. Potter's diamonds, shall we remain silent on such potent subjects?

I think so, for we may talk of these things; but there are two paths which we can follow; one is the road of criticism, and the other the road of kindliness. Those who take the first road will tell you that Mary dresses like a tramp, that she is 40 and apes 16, that Jane's management of her servants shows a lack of commonsense that Mr. Potter's millions are not inherited, and that his father, Well, my dear, everybody knows what a brute he was when he was drunk and his mother "whisper" ran away with another man." Mrs. Potter's diamonds are declared too pretentious for her social position.

And so on, ad infinitum.

Now, if the other road had been followed, the Road of Kindliness, Mary Jane and the Potters would have been reviewed thus:

Not a word of Mary's bad taste in dress, but an account of her wonderful work among tenement children.

Not a word of Jane's lax management, but a recital of the beauty of her mother-motherhood, her serene method.

Not a word about Potter's father, but instead an emphasis given to his generous and complete "forgive."

Not a word about Mrs Potter's diamonds, but a long, long tale of her unostentatious charities.

I remember a certain fireside group in a boarding house who thought it great fun to call themselves "The Tea Cup Club" and to sit late over the coals, discussing the faults and frailties of the rest of the boarders, but one night one of the girls—for there were two women and two men—said penitently: "I know I started all this, and it's awfully funny and interesting to pick people to pieces. But it isn't worthy of us. Let's begin over, and see what we can find that's pleasant in everyone. It will be an experiment, but I believe we shall find it good, mental and spiritual exercise."

And they did! They found that plain desert of a boarding house blossoming like a rose! It was wonderful how little Mrs. Newlywed was graduated in the light of their charity from "silly" to "sweet," how old Mr. Growler was found to have a certain whimsical wit which more than offset his grumpy ways.

And so it went on until kindly comment became the habit of the "Tea Cup Club" and their reward was in the untouched walls of their own glass houses.

NOT YOURS TO-DAY FOR YESTERDAY'S WINNING

Bob came to me the other day and said, "I am in love."

"Tell me about it," was my demand.

Of course, we all know the old story. Bob said he was not good enough for her, that she was the most beautiful creature in the world, that she was a angel, and the adoring rest of it.

"And all the fellows think so, too," said Bob.

"Is that why you love her?" I asked, "because the other fellows admire her?"

"Of course not," Bob protested.

Yet I am not so sure. I am not really sure whether Bob is in love at all. He fancies that he is because he is proud of the fact that little Mary, out of her circle of admirers, bestows upon him the distinction of her favour.

"Last night she said 'Yes,'" he confided, later.

"It is easy enough to win a girl's love," I told him, "the hard part will be to keep it."

But Bob is not worried about that—no man ever is. As soon as he is engaged he sits back and rests secure. He has no fears for the future. It is this attitude on the part of the masculine sex which, I believe, is often the cause of broken engagements and of unhappy marriages.

Before he has won her, a man will do anything, dare anything to win his lady's favour; then, having captured her, he complacently believes that her feeling for him can never change. He does not understand that to hold love one must love deeply, and that depth of affection is proved by actions.

Women admire steadfastness, courage, honesty. The man who promises all things when he first falls in love, and who afterwards lets himself down, may find the lady of his heart looking at him with troubled eyes, which give evidence to the unhappiness in her heart.

The tragedy that came recently into the life of a little bride on her honeymoon might seem laughable were it not for the fact of the principle involved.

Foolishly, perhaps, she had asked her lover to stop smoking, and he had promised to give up his cigars. During the year of his engagement he had kept his promise. On their honeymoon an old friend urged him to smoke. He protested feebly, but finally gave in.

The little bride told me of it afterward in a heart-broken confidence.

"If he had never promised," she wailed, "it wasn't that he smoked, but that he broke his promise."

"But you still love him?" I said to her.

"Yes—but with a difference, oh, with such a difference. How can I trust him now?"

So I say to young men who are falling in love, be careful. Be honest with the girl and with yourself. Do not promise things which you cannot perform. A lie is the worst thing which can come between an engaged or married couple. Be frank, and, if necessary, take your punishment.

If you are really in love you will want to be good and true for the sake of the girl whom you have won. But you must show this goodness and truth in your attitude toward her. Don't make your love a thing of words; make it rather a thing of deeds.

HE WILL NOT TELL

Premier Borden Silent on Manitoba Boundaries

HUDSON BAY RY. DELAYED

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Hon. R. L. Borden and several members of his Cabinet very skilfully skated around the thin ice of the Manitoba boundary question on which they were urged to disport themselves by the request of E. M. MacDonald (Pictou).

Mr. MacDonald wanted to know what about the financial settlement, what about the control of the newly-annexed lands, what about the Manitoba school question as regarded the new territory?

The Premier declared that Mr. MacDonald would find out when the Government brought down its measures. He did not intend to discuss the question till then.

Hon. Robert Rogers said that Mr. Borden would give Manitoba the justice for which she had vainly besought the Laurier Government for seven long years. They only wanted fair play. The settlement arrived at would satisfy everybody.

The afternoon session was almost entirely devoted to a discussion of the Hudson Bay Railway.

D. B. Neely (Humboldt) in connection with a motion for all papers, etc., in the case made a vigorous attack on Hon. Frank Cochrane for the suspension of work on the contracts awarded by the late Government for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway. He claimed that it was a violation of the pledge given by Mr. Borden during his western tour to speedily complete the railway.

James MacKay (Prince Albert) said that Laurier in 1908 promised to have trains running to Hudson Bay in four or five years, yet the first contractor only arrived on the grounds two weeks before polling day in 1911, There would be practically no delay under the present administration.

J. G. Turriff (Assiniboia) declared it was absolutely necessary to get supplies in as soon as possible if the right of way was to be cut out this winter.

Hon. Frank Cochrane affirmed that the new Government would carry out all its promises made before it came into power, and particularly this one in regard to the Hudson Bay Railway. Representations had been made to the Government that the road did not start in the right spot, that the surveys were not right, and that the first 100 miles included a deep swamp. There would be no delay more than was necessary to check up these matters. The original estimates for surveys of the N.T.R. had been more than doubled. What reason was there to suppose that this might not prove the case in regard to the Hudson Bay Railway?

Hon. Frank Oliver thought Mr. Cochrane's statement revealed a serious situation ,which would mean a delay not of a month or so, but of one, two or more years.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said his interpretation of Mr. Cochrane's words was that the route determined by the old Government was to be given up entirely. This meant no release of the order for suspension of the work would be given this winter. It would mean that everything would have to be commenced anew. The people of the west would not stand for the delay.

Hon. Frank Cochrane explained that it was possible to check the old surveys without making new surveys.

Premier Borden declared that it was the right and duty of the new Minister of Railways to give reasonable consideration to the route and not to accept it without question as settled by the late Government.

A POWERFUL AND EFFECTIVE CURE

For Catarrh, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Asthma.

Soothing Balsams Are Carried to the Sore, Congested Membranes — Cure Quickly and Completely.

Diseases of the breathing organs are, as you know, excited by germs so minute that only the microscope can reveal them; they are lodged in the tissues, develop there, and cause all the trouble. That is how consumption starts.

If the cause of the disease can be carried by air, why not the remedy? This conclusion lies at the root of the Catarrhozone treatment. The instrument through which you breathe fragrant, healing Catarrhozone splits up into minute particles this invaluable healing and curative agent, thereby enabling the air to carry it to the remotest ramifications of the breathing organs, and diffuses itself over their entire surfaces.

CATARRHOZONE ALWAYS CURES.

It would be absolutely impossible to breathe through a Catarrhozone inhaler without carrying this liquid to the remotest parts of the breathing apparatus. Upon healthy tissue it has no action, but upon diseased tissue and upon the micro-organisms which infect diseased tissues its action is so wonderfully curative that the disease is completely abolished. Then the tissue heals.

EARLY TREATMENT IS WISE.

Catarrhozone is an ideal remedy for diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. If you have catarrh, or bronchitis, or asthma, all are equally curable by Catarrhozone. These diseases are all modifications of an inflammatory condition of the lining membranes of the throat and nasal passages. Under these conditions we call it catarrh. When it extends to the bronchial tubes, we call it bronchitis. The condition is the same, the causes which produce the diseases are identical, and the remedy, Catarrhozone, acts equally promptly and emphatically upon the different forms of this disease. Your case is curable. Get Catarrhozone to-day; two months' treatment (guaranteed) price $1; small size 50c. Sold by all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

OXO IN CUBES

INVEST 10c. in four OXO Cubes. Use one to make a cup of delicious Bouillon. Use another for a plate of soup. Use the third to add flavor to a stew. Use the last in a glass of hot milk for the boy or girl.

And then see if you don't put OXO Cubes on your list of "wanted".

We know you will. You will find OXO Cubes so handy and helpful that you will deem them indispensable. Invest 10c. and put OXO Cubes to the test.

Ottawa's Water Troubles.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—To carry out the $2,400,000 plan to supply Ottawa with water from McGregor Lake a dam would have to be built at the Blanche River, in Quebec. Yesterday, Dr. H. Amy of the Geological Survey, one of the most eminent geolgists in Canada, says it would not be safe to do this, that the ground formation at McGregor Lake is of clay, and that both the landslides at the Blanche River and at Notre Dame de la Salle, where 32 lost their lives some years ago, were caused by damming up waters, thus causing the land to slide.

Extend S. A. Script.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—It is likely that the Government will extend for another year, or to Dec. 31, 1912, the period in which possessors of South African land warrants will be permitted to take up land in the west. Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—Fair foreign demand for all grades of Manitoba spring wheat was very heavy, there being orders in the market for over 1,000,000 bushels, but owing to the limited amount of ocean grain now offering from all ports, the volume of business accomplished was not large. Cables from the United Kingdom were easier. There was an increased demand for oats, a number of orders being received from the lower provinces for car lots. The trade in other coarse grains was quiet. A steady feeling prevails in flour, with a fair amount of business passing. Demand for millfeed and rolled oats is good. Cheese is quiet but firm. Demand for butter and eggs good, with prices tending upward. Dressed hogs advanced 2c. Trade fair.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Dec. 4.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 85 carloads, comprising 1519 cattle, 524 hogs, 1482 sheep and lambs and 46 calves.

Exporters.

Alexander McIntosh bought 37 export steers, 1285 lbs. each, at $6.60, and 10 bulls, at $5 to $5.50. These were the only cattle reported as being bought for export.

E. L. Woodward bought 59 good steers of export weight and quality, at $6.40, for the Swift Canadian Company, to be slaughtered for the local trade.

Butchers

Prime picked lots of butchers' cattle sold at $6.85 to $7 and one lot at $6.10; loads of good, at $6.60 to $6.80; medium, $6.20 to $6.45; common to medium, $4.85 to $5.10; cows, $3 to $5.25; canners, $2 to $3; bulls were bought for butcher purposes from $3.65 to $5.75.

Stockers and Feeders.

Feeders, from 900 to 1100 lbs. each, were quoted at $4.50 to $5.25; stockers, at $3.50 to $4.50.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply of milkers and springers, sold at prices ranging from $40 to $75 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves were quoted and sales made at $3.50 to $8.50, but only choice new milk fed calves brought the latter figure.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep sold at about steady prices, but lambs were 10c to 15c per cwt. lower. Sheep, ewes, sold at $3.25 to $3.75; rams, $3; lambs, $5 to $5.25; with a few picked ewes and wethers reported at $5.60. The bulk of lambs sold from $5.25 to $5.35.

Hogs.

Selected hogs, fed and watered, sold at $6.50. This would mean $6.15, f.o.b., cars, at country points, and $6 to the farmer.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Dec. 2 were 1500 cattle, 1700 sheep and lambs, 1700 hogs and 350 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 775 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 600 hogs and 125 calves.

The tone of the market for good butchers' cattle was much stronger than a week ago, and prices show an advance of 25c to 25c per 100 pounds on account of the fact that the supply was much less than half, of which the percentage of common and inferior grades was much smaller than it has been of late, which all tended to create a better feeling in the trade.

The top price paid for picked lots of choice steers was $6.10 per 100 pounds, and sales of full loads of good, useful stock were made at from $5.50 to $5.75.

In the small meat trade the feature was the strength in the market for lambs, and prices advanced 25c per 100 pounds. The demand was good, and sales of a few choice lots were made as high as $6 per 100 pounds, but the bulk of trading was done at $5.75 to $5.85. The market for sheep was firm under a fair demand, and small supplies. Calves were steady for which the demand was good at firm prices.

The tone of the market for hogs was stronger, and prices advanced 25c per 100 pounds, owing to smaller offerings, and the keen competition between some buyers for supplies. A few sales were made at $6.75 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars, but the bulk of the business was done at $6.50 to $6.65. The prospects now are that the tendency of prices will be to go higher, as the crop has been pretty well marketed, consequently receipts from now on will be smaller.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $6 to $6.10; butchers' cattle medium, $4.25 to $5.50; butchers' cattle, common, $3.50 to $3.75; canners, $2 to $3; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $5.25 to $5.50; butchers' cattle, medium, $4.50 to $5; butchers' cattle, bulls, $3.75 to $4.25; milkers, choice, each, $75; milkers, common and medium, each, $50 to $60; springers, $30 to $40.

Sheep, ewes, $3.75 to $4; bucks and culls, $3.25 to $3.50. Lambs, $5.75 to $6.

Hogs, f.o.b., $6.50 to $6.75.

Calves, $3 to $10.

An Interesting Letter

Zam-Buk has proved a great comfort to me, as it is now something like two months since it cured my little girl of eczema from which she suffered for a year. THIS is but a fragment of a very interesting letter received by the Zam-Buk Co. from Mrs. E. Cossett, of Joggin Bridge, Digby Co., N.S. The letter continues:

"When the sores first broke out I called in a doctor; but his treatment did no good. I tried salves and lotions and washes of all kinds, but the sores still spread. The disease finally became so bad that the child's face and shoulder were completely covered with sores. Imagine the pain the poor child (not a year old) had to suffer!

"One day a friend advised me to try Zam-Buk. I did not have much faith at that time that Zam-Buk would be able to work a cure, but as there could be no harm in trying it, I obtained a supply. At that time the disease had defied all remedies I had tried for over a year. By the time I had tried one box of Zam-Buk there was a marked improvement. I continued the Zam Buk treatment and day by day the sores showed signs of improvement, until the eczema was confined to the child's shoulder, one sore on which had been particularly deep. By degrees this, also, was healed, and finally Zam-Buk banished every trace of the disease.

"I have waited several months before mentioning this case to you, in order to see if there was any return of the eczema. There has not been any return; the cure being permanent, and there is no scar or trace of the disease from which the child suffered so long. You may publish this information if you wish, so that every mother may know the value of Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk is just as good for cold sores, chapped hands, piles, blood-poison, ulcers, bad leg, varicose ulcers, scalp sores, frost bite, baby's chafed places, etc. Also as an embrocation for rheumatism, sciatica, etc. All Druggists and Stores, 50c box or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

PRESERVE THE TREE

Reports of Untold Timber Wealth in the Far North are Exaggerations.

An interview with an engineer given recently in a western paper to the effect that there is abundant timber on the line of the Hudson Bay Railway is an illustration of the misapprehension in regard to this matter that exists in the public mind. Because there are large areas of land in the north on which there is timber of some kind, the conclusion is reached that it is all of present value and that the country has an unlimited supply. As a matter of fact a careful inspection of the timber along the line of the Hudson Bay Railway of the Department of the Interior, shows that there is not enough mature timber along the line of that railway to build the road. There are no prairie districts of any extent along the route, there are trees everywhere, but owing to repeated fires the forest is, except on the merest fraction of the area, too small for commercial purposes and unless it can be protected from fire until it reaches maturity, will never be of any use to the country. Explorations in other parts of the northern forested districts tell the same tale. Everywhere fire has worked havoc, and the forest is a mere wreck of what it might have been if fires could be prevented. And unless adequate measures are taken now to protect the young and immature forests which form the major part of the stand, the outlook for the future is none too good. If the northern forests are to continue to be a permanent source of wealth to the country, it is absolutely necessary that the fire ranging system should be extended and that proper methods of management of the forest should be applied, and public education to the value of the forest is even more necessary. In Sweden, which has large extents of northern forest, practically uninhabited, similar to those in northern Canada, has about eliminated the fire danger in such districts mainly by educating her people to the value of the forests.

STATUE OF SIR WILFRID

Mr. Paul Chevre Will Carve One for Chateau Laurier.

Mr. Paul Chevre, the Parisian sculptor, who designed the Champlain monument on Dufferin terrace, Quebec, and the Mercier monument to be unveiled next spring in the Ancient Capital has just booked the order from the G. T. R. for a statue of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to adorn the centre piece in the lobby of the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa.

The statue will be marble, along the lines of the bust of Sir Wilfrid Laurier made by the same artist and presented to the ex-Premier in 1901. The bust will slightly exceed the natural size, and will be supported by a single column, adorned with appropriate allegories. It will be ready in the spring and will cost $5,000.

BEAVER IN THE ADIRONDACKS

Reports from the Adirondacks are to the effect that under preservation the beaver has increased so rapidly as to threaten serious danger to the poplar timber. The busy little fellows are cutting too much down for their dams and supplies. The remedy surely is to thin out the numbers by the officials, as has been done in Algonquin National Park. This is better than declaring an open season and will go some way towards reimbursing the State for its expenditures upon preservation.

SCOTSMEN IN CANADA

Least Likely to be Discouraged by Hardships in Canada

In an article discussing types of settlers in Canada, the Victoria Daily Colonist thus sums up its views of the various nationalities in the United Kingdom. "Experience with settlers from Scotland in the eastern provinces shows that of all newcomers they are the least likely to become discouraged by hardships and disappointments. Instances could be cited where settlers from Scotland, who were by no means well placed in respect to locality in Canada, have persevered against very adverse conditions and achieved success. They do not readily give up, and they are not willing to sacrifice the result of their work, the latter quality leading them to stick out against conditions which would discourage people of almost every other nationality. When the Irish can be induced to go upon the land they exhibit excellent qualities, but again speaking from experience in the past, they are somewhat inclined to drift to the cities and work for wages in preference to becoming farmers. There are many conspicuous exceptions, and it would not be difficult to mention localities, settled wholly by immigrants from Ireland, which are now very prosperous. There are Englishmen and Englishmen, when it comes to speaking of their fitness for pioneer work in a country like British Columbia. Here again estern experience serves as a guide. A resourceful Englishman makes an admirable settler, but for some reason or other there are not as many of this type as could be desired. The facts seem to show that almost any Scotsman can make a success at farming in this new country under pioneer conditions, that most Irishmen will do the same if the lure of the city does not draw them away, and that a certain type of Englishman will also do so. We are speaking now of the pioneers only, the men who go out into the wilds and make a farm out of the rough. When it comes to the purchase of improved farms, we do not know that there is any difference to be n[illegible] between the people of the three [illegible]oms."

AN EASY CATCH

New Brunswick is not going to be behind in the fish jumping contests. A motor boat with three men was approaching the wharf at Westfield when a salmon, in one of his jumps, lost his bearings, and landed in the boat. As the salmon weighed twenty pounds, he made a great fuss until one of the three succeeded in killing him. The men were elated with their easy catch, and the salmon was good eating despite the singular method of his capture. The previous record in New Brunswick was a ten pounder which flopped into a dugout a fisherman was poling up the Matapedia River.

FORESTRY IN SOUTH AFRICA

Conservation is spreading in South Africa, and tree planting is to be commenced shround Bloemfontein. The Council of that city recommends all other councils and village management boards to follow their example. It is believed that all South Africa was formerly covered with forests, and the renudation of the forest area was contemporaneous with the appearance of the Bantu races from the north of the Zambesi. A forestry department of the Union Government has now been organized, and it is hoped to carry out extensive work of afforestation in the immediate future.

IT'S A RED INDIAN POLICY HOLDS BACK NEW ONTARIO

Mr. Hall States His Views on the Neglected Settlement of the Great Clay Belt---The Problem of Keeping the Boy on the Farm and Providing a Farm to Keep Him On Yesterday, Mr. Hall held a meeting at Union Creek, Galway. Among other things, he stated at length his views on the Whitney lack of an emigration policy.

"I condemn the Whitney Government," said Mr. Hall, "for its apathy in settling the 15,000,000 acre clay belt in New Ontario. This is a matter that comes home acutely to the dwellers in cities. If we don't have enough farmers in the country our source of supply is limited, and necessarily the cost of living goes up. Town and country, country and town—you can not separate them. United they stand, divided they fall.

"One of the tragedies of the census," continued Mr. Hall, "is the depopulation of rural Ontario—of old rural Ontario, I mean. Where have these stout sons and brothers of ours, the best stock in Canada, gone? Have they gone to that clay belt in New Ontario, than which there is no finer farming land in Canada, between North Bay and the Rocky Mountains? This clay belt of New Ontario is gladdened by trees and rivers. It has a home-like old Ontario look. It is far different from the bleak, wind-bitten prairie. It has summer delights and winter shelter that the Northwest knows nothing of. It is a mixed farming country, like Old Ontario, and should appeal to Ontario farmers' sons. Given an equal chance, with the prairie West, managed with any sort of business enterprise, encouraged by any sort of brisk immigration policy the clay belt of New Ontario would fill up with young blood from old Ontario. We must not only solve the problem of keeping the boy on the farm, but the other problem of providing farms to keep the boy on.

"Our Ontario boys," continued Mr. Hall, "have gone to the prairie West, or to the United States. We have salted North America with our best, and bravest. It is the shame of the Whitney Government that Ontario has not kept her sons at home by developing the New Ontario heritage, which is our natural outlet."

Half Has Not Been Told.

"I have quoted time and again," said Mr. Hall, "the Toronto Telegram's condemnation of the Whitney Government for sleeping seven years amidst the agricultural possibilities of the New Ontario clay belt. That is a sharp rebuke, no doubt, but it is only half the indictment. They have done worse than sleep. They have actually discouraged the settler with their land policy. They reserve half a mile on each side of the N. T. railway, so that the intending settler has to blaze his way through at least half a mile of bush before he can set foot on land that he can locate on.

"Take that other railway, the T. & N. O., the highly lauded, much advertised, Government-owned railway" Mr. Hall went on. "The Ross Government intended that railway to open up the country for the farmer, but the Whitney Government has used it as an annex to the silver and gold mines, which are, after all, an accident, and will be gone and forgotten when the farmer is alive and flourishing. The freight rates on settlers' effects on that railway are such as to discourage settlers. Instead of bringing farmers into the country, the railway keeps them out. It defeats the very object of its construction. A people-owned railway that doesn't operate for the benefit of the people might as well be somebody else's railway. What are dividends, what is the glory of the T. & N. O. Railway Commission, beside the real usefulness of a people's railway to the people? The aim of a people's railway should be service first, profit afterwards."

The Whitney Wet Blankets.

"And not only does the Whitney Government try its best to keep settlers out of New Ontario, with its railway policies," said Mr. Hall, "but Sir James wet-blankets the idea in a few blunt words. What's the use, he says, in substance, of bringing settlers into New Ontario, when its the Dominion Government that gets the custom's revenue from anything they buy? What's the use of Ontario spending money on these new settlers when they don't pay anything into the coffers of the state. A fine, let-her-slide policy that! A red Indian policy, I call it—the policy of keeping the country in forest, so the savages can roam about and hunt, instead of turning it into farms for honest white men.

"This worse than neglect of the farming possibilities of New Ontario," said Mr. Hall, "is a matter that touches Peterborough, and every town in Old Ontario. If we are to be prosperous we must have a prosperous country side. If we are to become greater and richer we must prevent this sad leakage of our native born to other provinces and other countries. All the people we import from England and Europe can never make up for the loss of our own bred-in-the-bone Ontario sons."

A Tired Men's Government.

"After all," said Mr. Hall, "I put a lot of it down to Sir James Whitney's advanced age. Sir James Whitney is 70 years old. If his Government is unprogressive and reactionary, that may partly account for it. If the Fathers of Confederation had shown the same backwardness as the Whitney Government toward new ideas, Canada would still be a little strip of country on the north bank of the St. Lawrence and Lake Ontario. But the Fathers were young men. They had spirit. They wanted to go ahead.

"I don't believe," continued Mr. Hall, "that Sir James Whitney can make the sun stand still. He is too old, even for that. History does not relate, but the circumstantial evidence goes to show that Joshua was a young man when he accomplished his famous feat."

That Big Majority.

"And then," said Mr. Hall, "there's Sir James Whitney's tremendous majority—almost five to one. Even the Conservatives are kicking at that. They say it isn't healthy. It's too big for any human being. It has caused Sir James to believe that he is superhuman."

"I will not go into his domineering ways in the Cabinet," said Mr. Hall. "Nor the way he orders his supporters in the House to withdraw bills that do not meet with his approval; nor his insults to the deputations, but I would like to allude to some of the graver troubles a big majority has led to".

"It has led to gross extravagance —expenditure has risen from four to eight millions in seven years. It has led to mismanagement and waste, perhaps graft, in his provincial institutions, and in the case of the Hamilton Asylum fire, to criminal carelessness, which cost several unfortunate patients their lives. It has closed off enquiry in the Public Accounts and other committees, and it has led to a break-down of justice in the Kinrade case, the Orangeville case, the Beattie Nesbitt case, and others which you can recall for yourselves.

"The moral is obvious. Elect me, and put a crimp in the Whitney majority. What Sir James Whitney needs is an active critic, to keep him from dwelling on his own importance."

The meeting closed with cheers for the king and the candidate.

NEW TRIAL ORDERED

Special Wire to the Examiner.

QUEBEC, QUE., DEC. 5.—Hormidas Trepanier, condemned for the murder of Adelard P. Louffe, has twice been saved from under the very shadow of the gallows. He was first sentenced to be hanged in June, then the execution was postponed till December twenty-first. Now the court holds that his confession was wrongfully obtained and orders a new trial, which may result in freeing him altogether.

Hand Badly Cut By Saw

Ernest LaPlante, an employee of the McDonald Lumber Company, was badly injured while at work this morning. He was engaged in the operation of one of the saws, when by some means or other, his hand came in contact with the cutting edge, lacerating it badly. He was also injured in the side, and it is feared that some of his ribs may be broken.

The injured man was removed to St. Joseph's hospital, where his injuries were attended to by Dr. McNulty. Later inquiries at the hospital, report the patient to be resting easily.

Ad. Club Meeting Great Success

An enthusiastic meeting was held last night in the National Hotel parlours for the purpose of organizing an Ad Club in this city. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Wm. Lydiatt. The event took the form of a banquet and was followed by addresses from the following gentlemen: Messrs. R. Turner, C. Banks, F. H. Dobbin, W. Stocker, R. M. Glover and others. Mr. Wm. Lydiatt, during the course of his address, outlined the work which was being done under the auspices of the Toronto Ad Club, explaining that the main object of the movement was to conserve public confidence in advertising, and for the general promotion of good advertising.

Nearly all of those present signed cards of membership. Mr. W. Stocker moved, seconded by A. Fowler, that an Ad Club be organised here. This was carried unanimously and the following committee was elected: Messrs. W. Cochrane, F. H. Dobbin, A. A. Fowler, R. Turner, C. C. Nixon.

This committee will draft out a constitution and select officers. A meeting will be held at a later date, when the report of the Nominating committee will be presented.

Barnardo Home Boy Gets Caught in Cattle Guard and Train From Peterboro' Hits Him

WILL SURVIVE

A nine-year old Barnado Home boy from Toronto, whose name could not be secured, was the victim of an accident at Millbrook yesterday, which nearly cost him his life. While on his way to school about 8.40, his foot got caught in a cattleguard on the G.T.R. about 1 1-2 miles south of Millbrook, and before he could get free the morning passenger train from Peterborough known as the "Cannon Ball," struck him, very seriously injuring him, but it is thought not fatally. He was thrown some distance, but miraculously escaped without any bones being broken. The boy was put on the train and taken back to Millbrook where he was removed to the home of Mrs. Wm. Turner, near the station and the services of Dr. Turner summoned. It appears that the lad, whose name could not be ascertained, has been staying at the home of Mrs. Hutchinson just south of the town, and had a habit of walking the track to school, although it was half a mile out of his way. The only visible injuries are a few cuts about the thighs. The train was in charge of Conductor Hobbit and engineer Pilling, and no blame can be attached to any of the crew, as it was purely an accident.

CHALLENGES FOR LONGBOAT

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 5.—The announcement by Tom Longboat, the marathoner, of his intention to enter the ring as a lightweight boxer, has drawn out a large number of challengers to fight Thomas, including several from runners who have failed to beat him in running, but think they can down him in the ring.

Aged Man Has Narrow Escape

An aged man, whose name is not to hand, had a very narrow escape from serious injury and probably death, while crossing the Sherbrooke street G.T.R. crossing this morning about 10.30. He slipped on the ice and fell on the middle of the crossing directly in front of an approaching freight train, and had it not been for the presence of mind of some railway men who fortunately happened to be on hand, he undoubtedly would have been struck, as the train was only a short distance away. A basket which the old man dropped, could not be removed in time and was crushed underneath the wheels of the train.

GRAY HAIR MAKES YOU LOOK OLD

Use Wyeth Sage and Sulphur and Your Gray Hair Will Quickly Vanish

Gray hair is a mark of age, and nothing that can be said as to its beauty will offset the disadvantages of this mark of age set upon your brow.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy darkens the hair and restores it to its youthful beauty. Our grandmothers and their grandmothers before them used sage and sulphur for darkening their hair. Nothing has ever been found more effective for this purpose than these two time-honoured remedies, but Wyeth, a modern chemist, has combined the two with other ingredients, which makes a delightful hair dressing for the hair, and which not only removes every trace of dandruff but promotes the growth of the hair. It also stops the hair from falling out, and makes it beautiful.

All druggists are authorized to refund the money if it fails to do exactly as represented.

Don't neglect your hair and don't resort to old-time hair dyes. Get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur from your druggist to-day, and notice the difference in your hair after a few days' use.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

TO COST $19,000

That is Estimated Expense in Putting Bridge Over Auburn Power Company's Dam—Council Discusses Matter

MR. LARMONTH PRESENT

Mr. J. H. Larmonth was present at the meeting of the City Council and at the request of Mayor Morrow, submitted some rough estimates as to the cost of a bridge over the new dam of the Auburn Power Company. The Mayor had been authorized by the Council to secure information as to the cost and as a result Mr. Larmonth was present.

He described a bridge such as had been proposed, which would give thirteen feet of roadway outside of the street railway tracks, which would allow two vehicles and a street car to pass on the bridge. It was thought advisable to have a concrete deck with block pavement and the piers would have to be extended. The cost of the work, he had roughly estimated at $19,170.67. The company would be willing to allow the bridge to be used if the city paid the exact cost of the extra work and gave the company a fixed assessment for ten years.

Ald. Buller and Duncan moved that the matter be referred to the Board of Work to report back to the Council on Thursday night, but afterwards withdrew the motion.

"I can't see anything in this for the city," remarked Ald. Morgan. There is not enough traffic up there for us to put that much money into a bridge. If we could get the street cars to run down through Ward No. 5, it wouldn't be so bad.'

"Well, here it is Mr. Larmonth. Ask him if they will," suggested the Mayor, where upon the East City alderman propounded the question again.

"As soon as we can get across Hunter street we will," replied Mr. Larmonth. "It would not pay us to extend our line to East City unless we could cross at Hunter street.

Ald. Bradburn thought the money could be better expended in a bridge at King street on Sherbrooke street, where he felt it was more required.

Ald. Duncan was of the opinion that it would be better to move the old Hunter street bridge further down the river and build a new one at Hunter street and Ald. Buller concurred in this opinion.

Ald. Metheral pointed out that the cost of putting a bridge across the Auburn Power Co's dam was away above what the Council had anticipated when the matter was first brought up.

Ald. Brown moved, seconded by Ald. Edgar, that no action be taken, but the majority of the Council thought the Board of Works should have an opportunity of going into the matter and a motion by Ald. Anderson and Morgan to that effect was carried.

The matter will be taken up at the meeting of the Council on Thursday night.

A THREE-CORNERED FIGHT IN EAST RIDING

INDEPENDENT SAYS HE IS IN FIELD TO STAY

Whitney Government Scored by Mr. E. Hawthorne, the Liberal Candidate and Mr. F. D. Kerr at Nomination Yesterday.

BIG CROWD PRESENT

The town hall, Norwood, was packed on Monday, to witness the proceedings and hear the speaking in connection with the East Peterborough nominations.

Mr. E. Hawthorne of Drummer was nominated as the Liberal candidate.

Mr. Jas. Thompson, of Havelock, was nominated as the Conservative candidate.

Mr. David Andrews of Asphodel, was nominated as an Independent Conservative.

Mr. F. D. Kerr of Peterborough, was also nominated, but withdrew.

After the nomination proceedings had been concluded, Mr. Thompson, ex-M.P.P., thought he had a sufficient number of supporters at the meeting and one of his friends moved that Reeve Knox of Havelock, be chairman. To this the friends of Mr. Andrews objected, and moved that Mr. Jas. Andrews of Asphodel, a brother of the candidate, be chairman, which latter motion was carried by an overwhelmingly majority, and Mr. Andrews took the chair.

Mr. Jas. Thompson, the first speaker, laboured in defence of the Whitney Government, claiming that it had made great advances in the development of New Ontario and in the carrying out of the work of the Hydro-Electric Commission. He argued that the finances had been well administered and that large grants had been made for colonization road purposes. Seeking to defend the Government on its educational policy the speaker claimed that the scarcity of Public School teachers was not the fault of the Government, but was due to the exodus of teachers to the North West. Mr. Thompson avoided any reference to the Government's stand on bilingual schools, or any reference to the assessment question. He stated that he thought the Hon. A. G. MacKay, former leader of the Opposition, and Mr. N. W. Rowell, the present leader, were upright and able men.

Mr. Hawthorne's Remarks.

Mr. Hawthorne, the Liberal candidate, pointed out that the Whitney Government, along agricultural lines, had proved practically a failure, and pointed with pride to the record made by the Hon. John Dryden, the former Liberal Minister of Agriculture. He deplored the evident neglect and misunderstanding of agricultural problems by the Whitney Government. He regretted that the Government had abolished the Model schools to the great disadvantage of rural communities in two respects; one, that the supply of qualified teachers had thus been closed off, and the other that many young people were debarred by reason of the great expense in attending Normal School from going into the teaching profession at all. On the question of bi-lingual schools, Mr. Hawthorne took a decided stand.

"It is the duty of the Government" he said, "to see that every child attending the Ontario schools should receive a thorough English education."

In the matter of temperance and moral issues, he thought the three-fifths' clause should be abolished, and the majority prevail. He said that it was idle for the Government to claim credit for any development in New Ontario, because that development had been made by the Liberal party in the face of the strenuous objection of Sir James Whitney, who had described New Ontario as the land of the stunted poplar.

Mr. Hawthorne's remarks made a deep impression upon the audience, that he was a man of sterling common sense and rugged honesty, who would make a representative in which East Peterborough could take great pride.

In the Field to Stay.

Mr. Andrews described himself as an Independent candidate, who desired to be thoroughly independent of both parties, and to see that what was fair and proper for the people was enacted in the Legislature. He was in the field to stay and could not be pulled off in any way whatever. He expected from the reception he had received that he would find himself at the head of the polls, and he recommended all who wished to be with the winner to vote for him. Mr. Andrews made several witty sallies, and evidently had a large number of friends in the audience. He claimed that Mr. Thompson and his friends were stating different things about him and his candidature in different portions of the riding, varying the story according to the race and creed of the voters. He claimed that his desire was to get fair play for every one.

Mr. F. D. Kerr's Address.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, who was nominated, but withdrew, deplored the tremendous increase in the expenditure on the part of the Whitney Government, and pointed out that the expenditure had nearly doubled since Whitney's advent to power, with the result that in the year 1910 a nominal surplus of some $3,000 was in reality a deficit of over $500,000. He showed the benefit to the riding of East Pet.

The Political Bravery Of Sir James Whitney

Sir James Whitney has a majority of sixty-eight in the Legislature. That is to say, there are eighty-six Conservatives and eighteen Liberals—almost five to one.

This brave man brings on an election a year ahead of time because he wants to take advantage of the Borden tide to keep his own majority at this swollen figure.

He says he wants to save the money that would be spent on by-elections. But that is a bluff. The real reason is that he is afraid his big majority will melt if he holds off a year longer.

The roasting he gets from his own friends and his own newspapers has convinced Sir Bombastes Furioso—otherwise Sir James Whitney—that he is near the end of his string. He knows that that big majority will vanish like snow in the sun if there is much more talk.

So he plunges the country into a general election in mid-winter in order to get a snap verdict. He pretends he will save the country $20,000 by this course, but he forgets the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of disturbance he causes business at this seaon of the year by an untimely appeal to the country.

Sir Jame Whitney's own friends say that his majority should be substantially reduced bot hfor the chastening of Sir James' outrageous temper and for the good of the country.

Elect R. R. Hall and give Sir James Whitney a foeman worthy of his steel.

Elect R. R. Hall and put the fear of the people into the Autocrat of Queen's Park.

JAMES B. M'NAMARA IS GIVEN A LIFE SENTENCE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., DEC. 5.—"9 a.m., California time."—So great is the crowd assembled to see and hear the sentencing of the McNamara Bros. that Justice Bordwell has privately apprised the newspaper men that sentence will be pronounced in different part of the building from the room where the prisoners were tried. The guards of deputies with the prisoners, have been quadrupled so that there can be no reprisal by the populace, a section of which feels very keenly about the matter. Both prisoners rose and ate a hearty breakfast, greeting the day of their doom with a smile.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., DEC. 5. — James B. McNamara was sentenced to imprisonment for life and John J. to fifteen years in the San Quetin penitentiary.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., DEC. 5.—James B. McNamara's confession, scrawled in his own hand-writing on an ordinary sheet of paper, was presented to the court at the opening today as follows: "I, James B. McNamara, defendant in case of people, heretofore having pleaded guilty to the crime of murder, desire to make this statement, which is true: "On the night of Sept. 30th, 1910, at 5.45 p.m., I placed in the alley, a portion of the Times building, a suit case containing sixteen sticks of eighty per cent. dynamite, set to explode at one o'clock next morning. It was my intention to injure the building and scare the owners. I did not intend to take the life of anyone. I sincerely regret that these unfortunate men lost their lives. If giving of my life would bring them back, I should gladly give it. In fact I'm pleading guilty to murder in the first degree. I have placed my life in the hands of the state."

C. P. R. NEW LINE FROM MONTREAL TO TORONTO

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, DEC. 5—It now begins to look as though the Canadian Pacific railway would shortly begin work on its proposed new line from Montreal to Toronto, via the Lake Shore route. The route of the new line, which has been under consideration for many years, has been filed with the railway commission, and it only waits for their approval for work to be started. Canadian Pacific officials stated yesterday, that the route which has been surveyed, is a very advantageous one. Contrary to the grade on present line, the new route is particularly good, as the grade is only 4-10 one. It is also a trifle shorter than the present one. The projected new line leaves the Canadian Pacific line at Glen Bay, just west of Perth, about fifteen miles from Smiths Falls. This part of the main line of the C. P.R. has just recently been double-tracked, which would give the new line double track from here to Montreal, a distance of 144 miles. Leaving Glen Bay, the proposed line travels southwesterly to Belleville. There it strikes almost due west for a few miles and then follows the shore of Lake Ontario to Toronto. It is about two hundred miles from Glen Bay to Toronto by the route surveyed and it is expected that if the new line is constructed, it will enable the Canadian Pacific railway to considerably lower the time for its Toronto-Montreal service.

LAST SHIPMENT FROM SHANGHAI TO MINNEAPOLIS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, Q., DEC. 5, 1911. — From the freight departments of the Canadian Pacific and "Soo" railways there comes a story of a fast shipment of walnuts from Shanghai to Minneapolis. The shipment, which was composed of 360 bags of nuts, weighing 26 tons, was made from Shanghai via the Canadian Pacific Railway's steamship, "Empress of India." This boat left Shanghai for Vancouver November 7th, arriving there November 24th. At Vancouver, the C. P.R had a special train in readiness and as soon as the consignment could be transferred from the ship to the train, it was hurried eastward. Portal was reached early in the afternoon of November 30th and from here the "Soo" Line rushed the shipment to Minneapolis, reaching there Saturday in time for delivery.

This is exceedingly good time, especially when winter conditions are considered and the L. E. Doudiet & Co., the Minneapolis firm to whom the shipment was made, expressed themselves as very much pleased with the service rendered by the Canadian Pacific Railway and "Soo" Lines.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

KEEP IT CLEAR.

The head of the Whitney government promised, if given power, that he would remove the administration of the License Law from political influence. Instead of that, he has made it ten-fold more the child of the political heeler than it was when he took it in hand. Sir James Whitney likes to have politics in departmental administration. It is more than suspected that political considerations account for the scandalous failure of the Department of Justice, and now we have the proposal to place the Hydro-Electric scheme, which, with all its faults of application, Hon. Adam Beck has protected to his best ability against the unsympathetic attitude, to speak most mildly, of the other members of the government—it is proposed to place it in charge of a government department. If it becomes a government department, it may easily become a scheme in the offensive sense of the world. Progressive modern sentiment is in the direction away from concentration, in the direction of independent management by commission, of public utilities. Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, is in favour of retaining the Hydro-Electric plan under commission management, and in this Hon. Adam Beck evidently agrees. Speaking at Paris, Ont., the other night, he spoke of the benefits of the public power scheme as represented by the Hydro-Electric Commission, but he was too good a party man to condemn the proposal, and too good a friend of the Hydro-Electric scheme to assent to its being strangled by the coils of partyism by placing it under a government department. The origin of the scheme was non-political. It proceeded from the municipalities themselves, originally, and keeping it out of politics, will be the better for its interests and for those of the province. Keep it clear of political pull.

HUNGRY FOR THE SPOILS.

Some of the Conservatives of Peterborough are unprincipled, as well as heartless in their application of the principle—"to the victors belong the spoils." They didn't get what they voted for, in the way of recognition, and protection of "Protestant" principles and interests, and in the way of protection of imperial and old flag principles; and so they are determined to have the spoils by way of compensation or revenge. Mr. John Cronin, locksmith at Little Lake, has received blunt notification that he is dismissed, the excuse being "offensive partisanship." This is only an excuse, not a justification. Mr. Cronin has his political principles, and, like every citizen, may have exercised his franchise accordingly. But he was a Grit in the place that belonged to a Tory. He could not be a very "offensive" partisan, because he was physically incapable of stumping for a Liberal candidate, or of canvassing extensively. He is about 80 years of age. He was, however, able to perform the duties of his place, especially in the dead of winter, but his salary was wanted for a young man who, if he is worth his salt, is buried in a position that means stagnation, and they must throw out of a job, at the beginning of a hard winter, a man of four score years, whose naturally hard lot, has been intensified by two recent deaths in his family. His dismissal was a brave and noble act, sanctified by its being a necessity in the interests of the absolute independence of the civil service. If these gentlemen are so determined to purge the civil service of partizanship, why don't they expose the neck of Mr. Joseph Stewart, license inspector, to the axe? He is not only an official of the most offensive and obtrusive partisan type, as extreme in this regard as he is useless, officially. More attention is, perhaps, given this matter than it deserves, but it serves the purpose of showing some misled Liberals and many decent Conservatives what they voted for, or at least, what they have got.

THE EDUCATIONAL BLUNDER.

(London Advertiser)

The following letter from an educationist in Alberta, bears out what was said in the previous edition of the Advertiser regarding the futility of Sir James Whitney's proposal for keeping Ontario teachers at home:

"I notice that Sir James Whitney is proposing to withhold certificates until teachers have taught a year in Ontario, in the hope of keeping teachers at home. May I point out that any teacher who thinks of coming west will find that a further reason for coming. When he or she leaves the high school all that is needed is to enter as a student at the Provincial Normal School (in Calgary, for Alberta), where a term from August to Christmas or from January to June, gives one a permanent certificate for the province which is accepted in the adjacent provinces as an interim certificate. Any teacher coming to these provinces with an Ontario permanent certificate is given an interim certificate of the same standing, and at the end of a year of satisfactory teaching the certificate is made permanent. So the new proposal might leave Ontario Normal Schools without a full quota of students."

As our correspondent says, Sir James' wonderful plan for hermetically sealing teachers within the province for a year would merely increase the trek to the west and deplete the Normal Schools, upon which Ontario is now absolutely dependent. The attraction of the west to an Ontario high school graduate would be strengthened by the added difficulty of obtaining an Ontario certificate. Six months are required in Alberta, or Saskatchewan, but two years—one year of Normal School work, and one of teaching — would be necessary in this province, under Sir James Whitney's sapient scheme. Does he owe the idea to Dr. Pyne or Dr. Seath or is it his own? Its absurdity and futility are worthy of the Minister of Education but its autocratic ring suggests that the Prime Minister may have had some share in it. The present system will have to be supplemented by the reopening of the model schools on an adequate scale, but the Government dislikes to confess its sin. The province is suffering for it, and the Government should be made to suffer, too.

STILL SQUIBBLING.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

Premier Whitney repeats that there are no bilingual schools, and explains what he means by the statement. "There are schools," he says, "where the pupils have to be taught, not the French language, but the English lessons by means of French, till they learn English." How is it then, that in Northern Ontario, teachers are found actively engaged in teaching, who neither speak nor understand the English language?

Here is a translation of a bit of conversation carried on between a reporter and a school teacher in the valley of the Sturgeon River — the conversation was carried on in French for the reason that the teacher could speak no English:

"What do you teach?"

"A little French."

"Any history or geography?"

"Oh, no. We have no histories, and there isn't a map in the whole school."

"Was the inspector here last year?"

"I think he was."

"Did he make any suggestions?"

"I don't know. We have nothing in the school."

"Have the pupils any English text books?"

"What use would they be?"

"Whose French reader have you got?"

"Rochon's."

Premier Whitney may repeat that this is not a bilingual school, for the reason that only one language is taught. But that language is the French. There is not an English-text book in the school. "What use would it be?" It appears that in that part of the country the people depend for what knowledge of English they are able to secure on the lumber camps, rather than on the schools.

In the face of such conditions what is the use of quibbling about names or definitions or about whether the French language is taught or simply used as a means for teaching English taught in some of the schools, then taught in some of the schools, then nothing is taught.

Manitoba Separate School Issues Kept Open By Borden

What Sir Wilfrid Settled the Nationalists and Mr. Borden Keep Open

There is something worth watching in connection with the alleged settlement of the question of the boundaries of Manitoba by those peculiarly interested in the matters involved. When Premier Roblin, of Manitoba, went back from his interview with the Borden Government at Ottawa, in reference to the boundary question, he went back flushed with victory. Th new goverament, in political sympathy with the government of Manitoba, had granted the boundaries and the financial terms that Manitoba desired. But there was a fly in the ointment, there was a string to the agreement. The burning question of Separate Schools in the added territory, was unsettled, and is still a subject of negotiation, with very little doubt as to the outcome.

It appears that according to the Act of Confederation, Separate Schools are by some claimed as a right under its provisions, and in the establishment of Alberta and Saskatchewan as provinces, this was considered. This fact Archbishop Langevin, who has not forgotten Sir Wilfrid Laurier's action in regard to depriving Manitoba of Separate Schools, will not allow the Borden Government to forget. He will insist upon the claims of the minority, and judging from the past in relation to matters of this kind, the Borden Government will lend a willing ear. While the terms the Borden Government gave to Manitoba in the matter of territory are identical with those offered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the school question is still a question which appears not to have been a subject of consideration in the negotiations between this government and the government of Manitoba. But it seems that it is brought forward as a factor in the present settlement, and judging from the past actions of the Borden Government, whatever the Nationalist element of the Borden Government demands will be granted. However distasteful the outlook may be to those who are hostile to the very idea of Separate Schools, it only adds another to the many disappointments over the results of the last election. They banded together and made a dead set upon everything that savoured of opposition to their extreme religious opinions or prejudice. They raised and exploited the race and religious cry; they elected candidates pledged to undying enmity to any legisaltive or government concessions to the ostracised and condemned religious element; and now they find that everything they voted for has been turned down and side-tracked, and the very elements that were the most bitter objects of attack have become the ruling factors in the settlement of national questions. Under these circumstances, they should find little difficulty in forecasting the solution of the school question that will come from the settlement of the Manitoba boundary matter. The merits or demerits of Separate Schools are not involved. The matter of moment is the disappointment of,—and incidentally, the lesson to—those who voted for the Borden Government on certain grounds only to find the ground cut from under their feet, the interests they voted and fought for pushed contemptuously aside and replaced by the most sinister elements ever introduced into the politics of Canada and yet effectively and enthusiastically adopted by the Borden Government.

Party Politicians Resent Reference To Inconsistency

(Toronto Star)

There is a very singular disposition on the part of many Conservatives to say and to believe—to really and truly believe—that it is petty on the part of Liberal journals to call attention to the curious means by which the Conservative party seeks to make itself solid in office. The appeals made in some of the Government organs are so phaintive and so moist with feling that one is forced to abandon the idea that they are but hoaxing and do not really mean it.

They do mean it. They have humbugged themselves into such a frame of mind that they think it is positively unpatriotic on the part of critics of their party to point out that their party is sacrificing everything it ever professed to hold dear and is doing this solely in order that the party may make itself comfortable in office for the poor little present time.

The Conservative party is the Orange party. The Orange Order is the backbone and ribs of the Conservative party in Canada. Yet, in order to make itself comfortable in office, the party makes terms with the Nationalists of Quebec, gives them their choice of portfolios when the Cabinet is formed and administers public affairs to please them. Yet, if we mention this they say it is an evil thing to do. It is wrong, they say, to remind the cat that the bird beside it is the canary it has so often shown an instinctive desire to eat.

It does not occur to them to find fault with a political dicker by which a Ministry snuggles down in office, supported by the thoroughly cultivated rival animosities and rancours of Quebec and Ontario.

The Conservative party professes to be the intensely loyal and Imperialist party. Yet, to make itself comfortable in office it has formed a coalition with the anti-Imperialist party.

The Conservative party professes to be the deep-sea-going, naval, Empire-rescuing party of Canada, yet its first act in office is to strangle our infant navy to please the anti-Imperialist Nationalists, who want no navy of any kind, and who will use their place in office to strangle any other naval scheme that may be offered for adoption in place of the one so lately done to death. There are some very sinister faces in the nursery.

That party professes to be the Empire-building party in Canada, yet it opposed the thirty-three and a third per cent. preference which the Liberal Government granted to British goods entering Canada, and as soon as decency will permit we shall see that preference reduced, our barriers against British goods increased, instead of being further diminished, as would have occurred but for the change of Government.

The Conservative party claims to be the one party in Canada which recognizes the tremendous debt Canada owes Great Britain. We owe Britain so much that she must grant us a preference on our products in her markets or Mr. Borden will withdraw the preference Laurier extended to her goods.

An Orange-Bourassa party, an Imperialist party with strong anti-Imperialist leanings, a jingo party pledged to abolish the navy, an intensely pro-British party that will cancel the British preference. And yet, its organs say, such a party should not be described in accordance with its peculiarities.

Charged With Theft From Canadian Express Co.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

HAMILTON, ONT., DEC. 5.— The police have arrested Douglas Chillman and Joseph Acheson, two well known men, in connection with a charge of stealing eight thousand dollars from the Canadian Express Co. on the night of Sept. 23rd last. Five thousand dollars has been found.

FESTIVITIES MARRED

Special to The Examiner

DELHI, INDIA, DEC. 5.—The Durbar festivities will be severely marred by the burning down to-day of a magnificent pavilion, with silver supports and other fittings, costing much money, in which their Imperial Majesties were to have been received on arrival here. This is the second big fire of Durbar building this week and incendiarism is suspected. It lends colour to the assertion of some British statesmen, that all India is in foment and it was the height of folly for Durbar to be held this year. The Royal guards have been doubled.

COMMITTED SUICIDE

LONDON, ONT., DEC. 5. — Mrs. Archie McLellan, aged 37, of Moore township, committed suicide at her home. She had been despondent for some time, and when her husban left her alone for a few minutes, she swallowed a large dose of Paris green. She leaves six small children.

ALLAN CUP RETURNED

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 5.—The famous Allan challenge cup, which caused a bitter controversy between Toronto and Winnipeg teams last spring and nearly resulted in a law suit, has been returned by the Ontario Hockey Association to the trustees in Montreal, with a scathing letter, accusing them of unsportsmanlike conduct, and agreeing to waive the competition till a new set of rules is drawn up.

THREE-CORNERED FIGHT

erborough and to Norwood of a Model School, such as had been in existence for many years, and regretted that lack of educational foresight and judgment had caused it to be closed with the result that 41 per cent. of the school teachers in the riding were without proper professional qualifications. He claimed that it was the duty of the voters to see that the children had at least the same advantages as had their parents, in having qualified teachers. He pointed out that on the three great questions before the people, bilingual schools, compensation for workingmen, and the matter of assessment, Sir James Whitney had no ideas of his own to present to the people, but stood idly by, waiting to be told by Dr. Merchant, Sir William Meredith, and in the matter of tax reform, by a commission, as to what he should do. This was a humiliating position for the Premier to be in. The speaker scored the Whitney Government for introducing the retrograde step of a three-fifths' clause, with the result that hundreds of bars were open against the wish of the people and, in numerous cases, municipalities were surrounded by local option in the entire district. In conclusion, Mr. Kerr condemned the scandalous manner in which the Government allowed Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, a Government favourite, to go unwhipped of justice.

Mr. Thompson closed the speaking with a short speech in reply.

OBITUARY

MRS. ANDERSON.

The death occurred this morning of Mrs. Margaret E. Anderson, wife of Mr. Laughlin Anderson, 580 Rogers street, East City. The late Mrs. Anderson's maiden name was Margaret E. Clifford. She was forty-six years of age. She was married to Mr. Anderson twenty-five years ago, and moved to Peterborough from Haliburton two years ago. Mrs. Anderson was a member of St. Paul's Presbyterian church. She had been ailing for about two years and suffered acutely toward the close of her life. She was a sister of Mrs. Sharpe on Sherbrooke street, and has a brother, Mr. Robert G. Clifford, residing on Reid street. She leaves a family of six daughters, Margaret, Violet, Grace, Hazel, Katie and Alma, and five sons, Stewart, Howard, and Norman, all at home; John of Saskatchewan, and William, married, in Peterborough.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday, Dec. 6th, from the family residence, at 2:30 o'clock, and proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

Mr. Anderson and family have the sincere sympathy of all their friends.

NEW POWER HOUSE

The new power house of the Auburn Power Company was put into operation early in November on the completion of the erection of the first 500 kw. exciter. The station is designed for the installation of four 500 kw. units in all, three of which will be in operation before the end of the present year.

The Electric Power Company and their engineers, Messrs. Smith, Kerry & Chace, are to be complimented upon the fine appearance of this plant, as well as for the completeness with which the engineering features have worked out. The power house, with its handsome red tiled roof, when completed, will be a distinct credit to Peterborough.

The power will be available for distribution by the Peterborough Light & Power Company, who also obtain 1,500 hp. from the American Cereal Company's power house, thus providing in a very safe and effective manner for the present power needs of Peterborough.

A 44,000 volt transmission line from Peterborough to Port Hope now nearing completion, will provide satisfactory for the interchange of power between Peterborough and other parts of the Electric Power Company system, and will incidentally feed the new sub-station at Millbrook.—Electrical News.

A RUNAWAY

There was some excitement this morning when a horse, attached to a loaded delivery waggon, and standing outside a store on Park street, ran away.

The horse was one that Mr. J. T. Braund was giving a trial, with a view of replacing one of his animals, which died last week.

The driver, who was in the store, was first notified of the escapade of his beast when, hearing a noise, he rushed out to see the affrighted animal careering down the road. The horse had apparently much spirit, for when seen galloping down Charlotte St. it showed no signs of decreasing its speed although one of the front wheels of the vehicle had disappeared. It turned the corner at Aylmer street very gracefully and continued north down Hunter street and into the post office yard. Here the animal suddenly found peace, for it stood still.

Meanwhile the driver followed in the wake of the runaway, gathering pieces of harness and lost wares (for not a thing was left in the waggon) and affected a reconciliation with his steed at the post office.

It is understood that a street car was the cause of the runaway and a weight with which the animal was secured, was not sufficient to hold it.

RINK FLOODED

The Sacred Heart skating rink will be flooded for the first time to-day.

As soon as the weather permits, the rink will be prepared for skating. Some very suitable dressing rooms which are well heated and lighted, have been erected. The rink is 190x80 and apart from the Little Lake is the largest sheet of ice in Peterborough.

THAT BRIDGE

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I understand it is estimated that for a new bridge to be constructed over the proposed Auburn Power Company dam, it would cost the city in the neighbourhood of $18,000, or $20,000. Maybe I ask why, when the water works dam was being constructed, the City Council did not see to it then, that a bridge was built across the city's own dam? That would have been the feasible and proper place for a roadway, and the street railway to cross the river. Is it not strange that our City Council, Board of Trade, Town Trust Commissioners, and other municipal bodies did not have the foresight to see that a bridge was built across the dam at the power house? There should be a crossing provided for, somewhere at the north end I hope that the city will see that either at the Auburn or Power Company dam a bridge is constructed that would not only be a roadway for teams and foot passengers, but for the street railway as well. When is Hunter street, high-level going to be undertaken. That is badly needed, as that the Street Railway may give some attention to Ashburnham?

Yours truly,
RATEPAYER.

"JOHNNIE CANUCK" PUTS UP SOME PERTINENT POINTS

Peterborough, Dec. 4, 1911.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Both candidates in the present campaign are certainly to be congratulated upon the stand that they have taken in regard to the manner in which they have ignored those who have tried, and are trying, to introduce questions of a creed and race nature. It is hard to understand why so many of my fellow working men, after the farce comedy that has taken place at Ottawa lately, will waste their time, and sacrifice the present opportunity of greatly benefitting their condition by juggling with those most important questions that are before them, in order to find out which side the Pope is on.

Are we "easy" through our ignorance, or victims through innocence? If the former, goodness knows we have had examples enough in the past, independently of the horrible example we are experiencing at present. Recollect the easy manner some of us were made tools of at the last election and let us profit by such bitter experience in the future; let us ignore and condemn those who use contemptible means of this nature in order to get into power..

If the latter is the cause, then it is no wonder that the press gallery reported that the questions asked in regard to the marriage laws in the House the other day were asked and answered amidst laughter. Do you realize, dear fellow voter, that it was you, you poor innocent victim, that they were laughing at?

Of course, it would not do to tell you that this Hydro-Electric power scheme is an election fake. You know all about it, like the poor innocent lambs in Lindsay, with their electric tilter, Thomas shoe factory and the Graham electric railway (don't laugh). If we don't mend our ways, even worse may happen. You cannot expect that the sharks will always let the local fakers have things their own way.

Assert your manhood; be a man or a mouse. Come out in the open, don't crawl. Business men may make use of a sneak and a coward, but they never respect them.

Where, oh where, is now that apostle on land values, Mr. Leader? If this was a Whitney measure, I think we would have heard from him before this. How shallow; P'raps he is sick of the show. If so, I don't wonder, for he is not the only one that the last election has sickened.

If we, as working men, are ever going to get proper consideration, it will never be accomplished by such biased tactics as adopted by Webb of The Times. Such small fry as he have always been with us, and we are lucky that he proves himself such a lightweight.

Let us get down to business and see that those we love at home are protected by a proper Compensation Act. We have an idea what we ought to have, and if Sir James Whitney has not, then it is time we had some one in his place that does know. The trouble is that he knows what we should have, but he does not know yet what the manufacturers want.

Let us reduce the cost of producing a home by supporting tax on land values. Sir James condemns the idea and the Liberal party say we should have a trial at it, if we want to. I have yet to see where any one but Sir James has argued against this system.

When at other times the Provincial government went to the country, the temperance people got busy and got the candidates to pledge themselves. What is the matter on this occasion? Things don't look right, you Moral Reform advocates; other places have got busy as usual. Are the liquor interests too strong?

And lastly, the working man should vote against the Whitney government for the bungle they have made of what was considered from 1890, until they made the change, the best education system in the world.

Yours truly,
JOHNNIE CANUCK.

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

Ald. Metheral, chairman of the Board of Works, was, on motion, authorized to purchase another snow plough.

Ald. Graham wanted information as to what the City Trust Commissioners had done in regard to the city's request that they should purchase the Birdsall property as a site for a new city hall, and moved, seconded by Ald. Kerneghan, that the Clerk be instructed to ask the Commissioners how the matter stood.

The motion was adopted.

Moved by Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald. Metheral, that whereas the City of Peterborough has never had a representative in the Senate of Canada, and whereas this city is a very important commercial and manufacturing centre, is the largest city between Toronto and Ottawa, or Montreal, and is the centre of a large and populous district, this Council desires to impress upon the Government of the Dominion the strong claims which this city has to representation in the Senate, and to respectfully urge that a representative from this city should be appointed to that body at the earliest opportunity. And that the appointment of Mr. James Kendry, ex-M.P., who was for five years Mayor of the city would meet with the general approval of the people.

Also that a copy of this resolution be sent to Hon. R. L. Borden, Premier of Canada, and to the Cabinet Ministers from Ontario.—Carried.

Why Conservatives Resent References To Inconsistency

Speaking in the House yesterday Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

"In regard to the Manitoba school question," continued the Liberal Chief, "the Premier stated that in 1897 I said it was settled. I did say so, and I say so now but what does the Minister who sits by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk, Nationalist) say? What has he been saying? He has been declaring that it is not settled, that it will have to be settled. What does the Minister to his left (Mr. Pelletier, Nationalist) say? What does the Minister behind him (Mr. Nantel, Nationalist) say? They all stated that it was not settled, but that it would be settled satisfactorily by this Government. They were going to settle it over again."

"When did I say that?" broke in Hon. Mr. Pelletier. "I said that the settlement of the Manitoba school question made by you and your Government was not a just one, and did not do justice to the Catholics. I said that we now had a leader who would consider it a sacred duty to carry out his obligations."

THE COUNCIL WANTS MORE INFORMATION ON POWER

City Solicitor Hall and City Clerk Armstrong Will Go to Toronto to Interview Commission Before Deciding Whether or Not They Shall Submit a By-law at the January Elections.

The City Council will hold a special meeting on Thursday night to decide if a by-law shall be submitted at the municipal elections on January 1st, asking the people of Peterborough to say whether or not they favour the city making a contract with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission for a supply of power.

At a meeting of the committee of the Whole, held before the regular Council meeting last night, a letter was read from Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Commission, enclosing a copy of a by-law such as had been used in other municipalities and suggested that such a measure be submitted to the local ratepayers at the coming municipal elections.

The matter was discussed for some time by the aldermen. It was thought advisable that more information should be secured as to the cost of power and as to other details of the proposition before submitting the by-law, as the opinion was expressed by Mayor Morrow and others that it might be defeated through lack of information. The passing of such a by-law it was pointed out, would give the Council authority to go ahead with the measure without the people having another opportunity to express their opinion.

The Mayor explained that City Solicitor Hall and City Clerk Armstrong were not certain as to several points of law in regard to the by-law submitted and it was decided that the solicitor and city clerk should go to Toronto to-day or to-morrow to secure the necessary information from the Hydro-Electric Commission. They will also get into communication, if possible, with Hon. Adam Beck and will report to the Council at a special meeting on Thursday night.

If the Hydro-Electric by-law is to be submitted at the January elections it must be advertised and posted not later than Saturday next.

Mr. Beck's letter was as follows:

Dear Sir,—Since our visit to Ottawa the Commission has been advised by the Minister of Railways and Canals, Hon. Frank Cochrane, that leases will be issued by the Commission of Dams No. 4 and 8 on the Trent Canal, which will enable the Commission to furnish power to Peterborough, Lakefield and other municipalities in the Trent district. I enclose a short form of by-law, such as has been submitted in the various municipalities throughout the province, which I would suggest your Council submitting to the people at the coming municipal elections, authorizing your Council to enter into negotiations with the Commission with a view of making a contract for the supply of power.

Yours truly,
ADAM BECK,
Chairman Hydro-Electric Commission.

The main clause of the proposed by-law is as follows:

"Whereas, the Municipal Council of the Corporation of Peterborough, deems it advisable to submit to the ratepayers of the said city of Peterborough, entitled to vote on money by-laws a question as to whether the said ratepayers are in favour of a supply of electric power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, therefore the Council of the Corporation of the City of Peterborough, enacts as follows:

That the following question be submitted to the ratepayers of the Municipal Corporation of the City of Peterborough entitled to vote on money by-laws.

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario a supply of power?"

Were British Military Bands In R. C. Archbishop's Procession?

To the Editor of The Examiner

Dear Sir,—Could you tell me if it is true that at the welcome to Archbishop Spratt, the newly-appointed prelate of the Roman Catholic church in Kingston, the two military bands, the local regimental band and the Band of the Royal Military College, appeared in uniform in the procession? It seems to me almost impossible to be true. Certain people in Ontario, especially those associated or in sympathy with a Society of which Hon. Sam. Hughes, the Minister of Militia, is a member, combined in the late election to smash Sir Wilfrid Laurier, because members of the 65th Regiment in Montreal turned out in uniform in the Eucharistic procession last summer. Now, what is the difference? The men I referred to, rode the Protestant horse, rough shod, over Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and trampled him into the dust because he was a Frenchman, and a Roman Catholic, and was guilty of conspiring against Protestant liberties, by permitting His Majesty's militia to parade in uniform in a church procession. Such outrages would continue to happen if he were kept in power. "He must be destroyed—away with him! crucify him! Replace him with a true-blue British and Protestant Premier." They did it; they raised heaven and earth—and the other place, too—by some of their methods—to kill Laurier and put Borden in power. After the elections they gloated over their success. They gave Borden a majority of 70 in Ontario and they boasted that now he was strong enough to form a Government and "be independent of Quebec and papal domination". Borden's very first official act was an impudent denial of their claims to consideration and blow in the face, a snub and a throw-down. Instead of forming his government without reference to Quebec, he threw himself bodily into the arms of the meanest kind of French extremists, disloyal, and disaffected Nationalists. He gave them the best cuts in his cabinet, and to compensate the 'no-surrender' Ontario people for his surrender to their enemies, he made Bro. Sam. Hughes Minister of Militia, and he insults his Protestant Federation friends, by permitting two British military bands to play in a procession in honour of a Roman Catholic Archbishop! That wasn't what they voted for. They killed a decent Frenchman, and a decent Roman Catholic to put themselves and Protestant Canada under the thumb of traitorous French ultramontanes, who are more Catholic than the Pope himself. Don't they feel good over it?

Yours truly,
PENITENCE.

Note.—In answer to the correspondent's question, all that can be said is that the press reports stated that the military bands mentioned, were in the procession in honour of his Grace Archbishop Spratt, on the occasion of his welcome to the see city of his Archdiocese. There is no more reason to doubt the truth of the report than of any other press despatch in reference to news of current interest.

Calendars For Worthy Objects Placed On Sale In Peterborough To-day

Have you secured one of the pretty Christmas calendars in aid of the Peterborough Health Association? They were placed on sale this morning in the drug stores. When you are down town, step into one of these shops and ask to see them. Everybody has one or more fancy calendars among their collection of Christmas gifts. Then, in making your selections this year, don't forget the Health Association. Remember that in purchasing one of these calendars, you will perform a two-fold act. In addition to having a suitable gift for your friends, you will help along the noble cause of this local organization, namely, that of fighting tuberculosis in this city. Already a number of these have been sold by interested workers, but there are still several hundred to be disposed of before the amount of money that the Association is endeavouring to raise through this medium, is secured.

The Christmas stamps are also now available. In sending parcels and letters, put a few of these stamps on them.

As was stated in Saturday's Examiner, the object of this sale is to raise funds, in order to engage a district nurse for Peterborough.

Pastor of Park St. Baptist Church Commences Series of Special Sermons Upon "Some Questions the People Are Asking."

GIVES HIS REASONS

The Rev. W. C. Riddiford preached the first of his series of sermons upon "Some questions the people are asking" to a large congregation Sunday night in the Park Street Baptist Church.

The subject under discussion was "Would Christ attend or patronize a charity ball as a means of helping the poor or missions?"

Mr. Riddiford took two passages of Scripture as the foundation of his remarks: I. Cor. 16-14—"Let all things be done in love." John 21-15, "Lovest thou Me more than these."

I do not know how the person who placed this question in the box would answer this question; but I shall deal with this question, as I like to deal with all the questions of life, —in a broad, frank, scriptural way.

Now, a charity ball is held, as I understand, to help the poor; and to help the poor is a worthy motive, and a right thing to do. We cannot do too much to help the worthy poor.

But, is a charity ball in accordance with the principles and precepts of Jesus Christ. All things, whatsoever they are, should be submitted to that standard. Will this thing I am about to do, please God? Will a charity ball lift Christ up, or put Him down? Would Jesus Christ attend or patronize a charity ball, or any other kind of a ball, as a fit means for helping the poor or missions? Would He, the meek and lowly Jesus, of whom it is said: "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have their nests, but He had not where to lay His Highest. Would He, the Christ, the friend of the poor, give His patronage to a charity ball.

If I understand the life teachings of Jesus Christ at all, I say most emphatically, no. The New Testament says of Christ: "That He did always those things which pleased His Father "and no where do I find that Jesus Christ advocated a charity ball for the poor.

Do men and women dance to please God, or themselves? I think the latter; at least that is what I did it for. I had not time to think of God when I danced; nor did I get down upon my knees and pray "Dear Lord I am about to dance for your glory, please bless this dance."

Paul says, let all things be done in love. Now, we must get Paul' concep-tion of soul, if we wish to make a comparison with the ideal of a charity ball, and the ideal of that charity which worketh by love. Let all things be done in love. A charity ball, as I understand it, violates the first principle of love, inasmuch as it seeks to help others by gratifying self. True love never seeks nor wishes to please herself, when helping others.

To please self is the very opposite of love. To bless others by pleasing self is, as I understand it, the reverse of what Christ meant by that term. I have looked, in vain, through the pages of the New Testament to find where Peter or Paul, James or John, Deacons Philip or Stephen, advocated a charity ball to help the poor. They took up voluntary, free-will offerings for the poor, but no ban-feeds or balls. I certainly would have liked to have seen Peter dressed up for a fashionable charity ball. Fashion and charity — they do not live together. Dorcas did not have a charity ball to help the poor. General Booth has never advocated charity balls for the poor, and he and his noble army have done, and are doing, more to help the poor than all the churches combined. They are experts at the work, but no charity balls.

George Miller helped the poor, but no charity balls. I am glad to know that the annual ball for Dr. Grenfell's noble work and mission has at last bawled itself to death. Don't forget to give something towards it if you can. I am absolutely certain that Jesus Christ would not patronize a charity ball as a means to help the poor, or anything else. Have dances, if you must. It is the individual right of all, except Christians. Personally, I do not believe a Christian can dance to the glory of God. I never could; but don't insult the honest toilers of our city with a charity ball. The King's daughters do not have charity dances, I am sure. The charity dance is always beneath the Christian standard of benevolence. It is too worldly. It is of the world. It does not belong to the Church of Christ, as found in the New Testament. I feel certain that the lady missionaries in the foreign fields would not approve of the charity ball as a method of raising money for missions.

The charity ball does not meet, or measure up to the true standard of love. The King's Daughters are a noble band of women, and do a good work for the poor, but I believe that they could do more if they took all the money invested in costumes and the like and gave it to the poor.

I cannot bring myself to believe that these burdens imposed by fashion are in accordance with that love of Christ, which sacrifices it is all in order to redeem men.

I cannot look upon the bruised, bleeding Son of God, as He hangs upon the cross, and feel that a charity ball is His idea of bringing help to the hungry hearts and bodies of men. I may be wrong, but I dare to believe I am right. Let us give all we can in gifts and prayers and sympathy to all such societies whose motive is good, and whose mission is to help the poor. But, while we approve the motive and are sympathetic towards the mission, we must object to the charity ball, as a method or means, in fulfilling the motive and mission.

A statistician once asked this question in a certain journal: Why are about two-thirds of the men who dance, bachelors? I would suggest as an answer this. It is because of the unparalleled extravagance of the average woman's wardrobe, who attends charity balls and like affairs. For example, a young man is invited to a charity ball. He goes. He has some idea of love, home, marriage, and living happy ever after. He meets a lady of fashion, and when he gets back to his boarding place, he says: "Dear me, what would become of my salary if I had to support and keep up such style. He prays this prayer: From bankruptcy, marriage, suicide, good Lord, deliver me, and jumps into bed to dream of single bliss, and can you blame him.

One family alone in Toronto, spent six thousand dollars for dresse s etc., to attend the Duke's reception ball. It is a waste of God's money. It is sin. How many hungry mothers, and poor little children could have been fed with that money? Christ would not sanction or countenance an act of that kind.

So, I say, that Christ would not attend, or patronize a charity ball as a means or method of raising funds to help the poor, or missions.

First, because such methods do not accord with the principles and teachings of Christ in the New Testament.

Second, because it comes far beneath the standard of sacrificial love.

Third, because it is a wasteful extravagance of the right use of God's money. It is false to the ideal it aims at.

Give to the poor; help the poor; let Christmas cheer be given with a free hand but do it in Christ's name, and not in the name of a charity ball.

Mr J. McGuire, of the Kingston, Ont., Post Office, says: "I was almost crippled with corns. They made me so lame and sore I could scarcely walk. I used a number of remedies but got no relief. THE CITY COUNCIL'S "BUTTING-IN"

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I am told that the City Council last night passed a resolution, asking the government of the Dominion to appoint a Peterborough citizen a member of the senate, and nominating Mr. James Kendry for the honour. I have no objection to Mr. Borden's choosing a senator from Peterborough; but it ill becomes the city council to butt in and try to force the hands of the government, and assume to represent the views of the citizens in this matter. The council represents both Conservative and Liberal citizens, and it does not seem to me that is the duty of the Council to butt in and meddle in strictly party politics. They don't do the business they were elected to do any too well.

Yours truly,
VOTER.

Sir Wilfrid Accuses Sir James Of Using False Cry To Catch Votes

Sir Wilfrid Laurier in speaking (in the House) on the Manitoba boundaries question, yesterday, said:

"At the present time Sir James Whitney is parading and cavorting throughout the Province of Ontario, blaming that wicked man Laurier for not having given Ontario a Hudson Bay port. The charge is neither just nor patriotic on his part. It is calculated to stir up bad feeling between Manitoba and Ontario. It is calculated to destroy the true Canadian spirit.

"But apart from that what are the facts? The present Government have been questioned three, four, yes, five and more times as to the settlement which it had been announced they have arrived at. The question has been settled, and I can tell the Government how it has been settled. It has been settled with Mr. Roblin according to the lines of the settlement made by the Laurier Government. I challenge my hon. friend opposite, the Prime Minister, to deny this fact."

Sir Wilfrid paused, but Premier Borden sat silent, while the Liberal benches cheered.

"I knew it," continued Sir Wilfrid. "He cannot deny it; my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior"—pointing at Mr. Rogers—"knows it; my hon. friend th Minister of Railways and Canals"—pointing at Mr. Cochrane—"knows it; and yet Sir James Whitney is left to go through Ontario using this question unfairly for the purpose of trying to catch votes."

YOUNG MAN BADLY INJURED IN A RUNAWAY ACCIDENT

Team of Express Horses Make a Bold Get-away in East City To-day---One Man Rendered Unconscious

The team of bronchos belonging to Mr. Isaac Noble express man, figured in a sensational runaway episode yesterday. They were in charge of a small boy and were being driven to the home of Mr. Fred Cox, Otonabee. While making the descent of the hill leading to the lift-lock the neck-yoke by some means or other became detached, allowing the rig to strike the horses legs. They immediately broke into a run, which for a time was fast and furious. The driver of the rig did an aeroplane stunt at this juncture and landed in the ditch uninjured. The other occupant of the rig, Charles Hollingbeck, was less fortunate. He clung to the seat and when the rig struck an embankment and was overturned, he was thrown out with violent force. He received a nasty cut on the head and was rendered unconscious for some time. Assistance was soon to hand and the injured man was conveyed to Mr. Richardson's, nearby. Here restoratives were administered and the victim restored to consciousness, after which he was removed to his home.

The horses continued to drag the overturned rig over the rough ground for some distance. When taking the curve leading south along the canal one of the horses fell, thus bringing to an abrupt end, their bold dash for liberty. Very little damage was done to the rig, and the horses were uninjured.

CASH FOR MILK

By advertisement in another column it will be seen that the Milk Vendors' Association of Peterborough has decided from this date that no milk will be supplied to any home in Peterborough without being paid for at the time of delivery. The reason given is that the members of the Association cannot stand the loss sustained by supplying milk to those who are not sufficiently honest to liquidate their debts before removing, and those removing from Peterborough and changing their residence (while none of the amounts are large) eat into the profits, and those who are willing to pay, have to be charged a little extra for their milk to make up for the losses sustained by credits. In future the milkmen have agreed that no credit will be given.

Here is another case where the honest and just have to be made pay extra for goods obtained by those who are not willing to pay for what they get.

Want Welland Canal Deepened

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, ONT., DEC. 5.—"We will deal with this business from the standpoint of a business government, but I cannot promise you immediate action," was the reply of the Premier to an important deputation from the Ontario Associated Boards of Trade, which waited upon him and his colleagues this morning, to ask for the immediate deepening of the Welland Canal. He added: "Our object is to keep Canadian trade in Canadian channels, and to continue as much as we can the policy of making that trade go east and west. We have already received a similar deputation in regard to the Georgian Bay Canal and I can assure you that the whole question of transportation will be given the most careful consideration. We would not even embark upon construction of navy without consideration, and I am sure you, as business men, would not ask us to pledge ourselves to any definite policy of some heavy character without consideration. Your business men would not enter into any great undertaking without careful thought and you must give this business government the same privilege. We have only been in power a few weeks, though to some of us it seems a very much longer time, and you must, therefore, pardon us, if we do not give you an answer off hand. The whole question of transportation will be carefully considered."

Large Fortune Awaits Heirs

(Lindsay Post.)

Another huge fortune in England goes a-begging for heirs, and Mr. D. Gage of this town says he is a claimant for a portion of it.

The said fortune, which is said to figure up in the millions, has been lying untouched in Manchester, Eng., for thepast seventy-eight years. Recently, however, Mr. Gage received a letter from Mr. Gunn, a lawyer in Manchester, who is looking up heirs.

Mr. Gage says his grandfather, was Nicholas Mosier, his mother being Ruth Mosier. Nicholas served under Sir Isaac Brock in the war of 1812 and was wounded. He was taken to Port Hope, where he died and was buried on Protestant Hill.

Mr. Gage has two sisters, who are claimants for the fortune, Mrs. Varcoe, of Cold Springs, Northumberland County, and Mrs. Baker of Cobourg.

THE HERPICIDE GIRL

Advises Gentlemen

At Mrs. Blank's reception I met a gentleman who fulfilled my ideal of a man in all but one particular. He had a good head, fine physique, perfect manners, was a most interesting personality, and bore himself with the distinguished air of a gentleman. His linen was immaculate and his clothes faultless as to cut and material. But all the pleasant first impression was ruined when I discovered the collar and shoulders of his dresscoat covered with loose hair and flakes of dandruff.

To me this was an indication of personal carelessness, not to say uncleanliness. I wanted to tell him to get a bottle of Newbro's Herpicide. This remarkable remedy would, in a short time remove every trace of dandruff from his head, stop his hair from falling and prevent him from becoming bald. I don't like baldheaded men, they look old whether they are or not.

Dandruff is caused by a germ and Newbro's Herpicide kills that germ. The itching, which is so frightful with dandruff, stops almost instantly.

Herpicide is the Original Remedy, that destroys dandruff. There is nothing in the world just like it, nothing that is "just as good."

One Dollar Size Bottles are guaranteed by all druggists to give satisfaction.

Applications obtained at the good barber shops.

Send 10c. in postage for a sample bottle and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

CLEMENCY IS SHOWN

Gompers Expresses Satisfaction at the Sentences Meted Out to McNamara Brothers

HAVE GIVEN VALUABLE FACTS

Los Angeles, Dec. 6.—James B McNamara, confessed murderer, was sentenced to life imprisonment here yesterday by Judge Bordwell.

His brother, John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, who confessed to the dynamiting of the Llewellyn Iron Works, was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Twenty-one persons lost their lives in The Times' disaster. No one was killed in the Llewellyn Iron Works affair.

Imprisonment will be in San Quentin penitentiary.

For both men District Attorney Fredericks desired clemency—life imprisonment for James and a sentence of between fourteen and twenty years for John.

With the announcement of the proposed plea for clemency came the information that the brothers had furnished information of great value in the investigation of an alleged far-reaching dynamiting conspiracy, and that the plan was to serve them immediately after sentence with summonses to appear before the federal grand jury.

Two hours before court opened several hundred curious men and women assembled about the corridors of the hall of records to get a last glance of the prisoners.

The McNamara brothers faced the prospects of sentence with more than equanimity. They rose in good spirits and made rapid work of a big breakfast. James smilingly met the greetings of his guards, while John appeared to be more concerned about his personal appearance than usual.

Oscar Lawler, formerly assistant attorney-general, and a prominent figure in the Ballinger-Pincher investigation, yesterday received word of his appointment by Attorney-General Wickersham as special prosecutor in the grand jury enquiry into the alleged dynamiting conspiracy. Lawler has been assisting Attorney Fredericks for the last two months.

In a dead silence Mr. Fredericks read the following confession of Jas. McNamara:

"I, James B. McNamara, defendant in the case of the people, having heretofore pleaded guilty to the crime of murder, desire to make this statement and this is the truth:

"On the night of Sept. 30, 1910, at 5.45 p. m., I placed in Ink Alley, a portion of The Times building, a suitcase containing 16 sticks of 80 per cent. dynamite, set to explode at one o'clock the next morning.

"It was my intention to injure the building and scare the owners. I did not intend to take the life of anyone. I sincerely regret that those unfortunate men lost their lives. If the giving of my life would bring them back, I would gladly give it. In fact, in pleading guilty to murder in the first degree, I have placed my life in the hands of the state.

(Signed) "James B. McNamara."

Judge Bordwell commented upon McNamara's declaration that he did not intend to destroy life.

"The circumstances are against that statement," he said. "A man who will place sixteen sticks of dynamite in a place where you, as a printer, knew gas was burning in many places, where many were toiling, must have no regard for life; must have been a murderer at heart and undeserving of clemency."

For reasons other than such a plea of non-intent, Judge Bordwell declared he would impose the penalty of imprisonment for life.

John J. McNamara came next. The Llewellyn Iron Works indictment was read to him by the judge.

District Attorney Fredericks, however, said that as in the other case, the plea of guilty permitted consideration, but pleaded that the defendant, John J. McNamara be given a "few years of freedom at the end of his life."

Judge Bordwell declared that the strictures against Jas. B. McNamara would also apply to him. Clemency he declared, was not because of merit as to intent.

The McNamaras were taken from the court room back to the jail. Their counsel left the room almost immediately, and the crowd filed out laughing and chatting

Gompers Well Pleased.

New York, Dec. 6.—"I am glad a death sentence was not imposed. I am opposed to capital punishment under any circumstances. I think the sentences received by both men were appropriate to the crime."

This was the comment of Samuel Gompers last night when asked if he was satisfied with the punishment meted out to the McNamara brothers in Los Angeles yesterday. Mr. Gompers and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, expected to return to Washington last night after a conference with A. B. Parker, their counsel in the Bucks Stove and Range case, for which both men will have to answer to the court several days hence.

"I would like to make one statement," continued Mr. Gompers, "concerning the strictures made by District Attorney Miller of Indianapolis as to the wisdom of my leadership of the American Federation of Labor. I want to say that if Miller has a case to prosecute against me or anybody else, let him go ahead and prosecute, but it is not for him to say whether my leadership is wise or not. I consider his criticism a gratuitous and unwarranted impertinence. Miller has no right to set himself up as my guide. I propose to stand true to the men of labor."

Another Durbar Fire.

Delhi, India, Dec. 6.—The magnificent pavilion in the Durbar camp, with its massive silver supports and brilliant decorations, in which the King-Emperor was to be received by the Indian princes on his arrival here, was burned down yesterday.

This is the second disastrous fire of unknown origin in the Durbar camp within a week, and the occurrence has caused a sensation.

WEST PAYS THE PIPER

Is Taxed Heavily by Tariff Conditions

PLOUGHS UNDER DISCUSSION

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Parliament did no business yesterday, but the five hours of talk developed another illuminative object lesson and moral from the defeat of reciprocity and the return of the manufacturing and high tariff interests to power. The Liberal members from the west are having a decidedly easy time of it in effectively criticizing the Government. Subjects of special interest to the west have occupied a large part of the time of the House so far this session, and the Opposition members have fully emphasized that the defeat of reciprocity has already cost the western farmer over twelve millions on this year's crop. D. B. Neely led the attack with quotations from a recent farm implement catalogue.

"Now, Mr. Speaker," said the member for Humboldt, "there is no mention of elections here, but we can read between the lines."

"There were interests in this country," he declared, "that have no friend, no patriotism, no citizenship, and no country."

The royal assent was given yesterday afternoon to the supply bill and to two bills extending the term of completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which has almost expired, the term to be fixed by order-in-council, and permitting the Government to make a new contract with the G.T.P. company.

W. M. Martin (Regina) called the attention of the Government to the serious car shortage in the west. It was said that grain had even had to be dumped and was rotting beside the tracks. Something should be done.

In reply to a question by an Opposition member, Hon. F. D. Monk stated that the only delay in the prosecution of public works was where complaints had been made, which seemed to be well founded, that the works were unnecessary.

In some of these cases, though money had been voted to begin them and it would require a considerable sum to complete them. They were, therefore, held up till the Government was fortified by further information.

W. F. Cockshutt (Brantford) resented as an attempt to set the farmer of the west against the manufacturer the statement of Hon. Frank Oliver, that while the Cockshutt Plow Co. sold a steam gang plow in Peoria, Ill., for $525, and in Minneapolis for $502, after paying 15 per cent. duty and freight, while in Western Canada it cost the farmer over $600. He was doing what was done during the election, attempting palpably to mislead the public by quoting the wholesale against the retail price.

"If he is prepared to buy as many plows as our one customer in the United States, he will probably get the same rates," said the member for Brantford.

Outside of the United States, said Mr. Cockshutt, there was no country in the world in which implements were sold as cheaply as in Canada. The Wilkinson Plow Co. of Toronto had been driven out of business by the fierce home competition and the last straw had been the threat of reciprocity.

Mr. Oliver declared that a protest was only to be expected when a large number of eastern manufacturers lined up their employes before election and told them how to vote. This was an act of tyranny.

D. B. Neely (Humbolt) declared that the retail price of the Cockshutt plow gave the Minnesota farmer the advantage.

Mr. Neely complained bitterly of the Manufacturers' Association passing a resolution that the time was not ripe for an increase in the British preference. These were the men who talked of loyalty in the late election.

Major Currie warned the Liberals that so long as they went on attacking Ontario, they would remain in Opposition. They talked about the farmers of the west, but they seemed to forget that Ontario was an agricultural country. It produced $47,000,000 more field products than the whole of the west combined, and these farmers of Ontario had voted almost to a man against reciprocity.

Martin and the Nibs.

London, Dec. 6.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In reply to a question of Joseph Martin in the House of Commons, Hon Winston Churchill said the previous service of Lieut White and Lieut Grahame had been excellent. The strict rule of naval service had inflicted on them the punishments awarded by the court-martial. "I would have thought that under the circumstances the questioner would not desire to aggravate the consequences of their mistake by further publicity."

Martin—"May I ask whether the Admiralty did not consider their social position rather than professional competence?"

Churchill—"That question didn't arise either with the Admiralty or the Canadian Government." (Cheers.)

CABLE RATES REDUCED

Strathcona Responsible for a Big Reduction in Tolls

STARTS ON JAN. 1st NEXT

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Important reductions in press cable rates were announced last night in a cable to Premier Borden from the Canadian High Commissioner in London. The announcement was communicated to Lord Strathcona by the British Postmaster-General and transmitted at once to Ottawa.

"His Majesty's Government are in cordial sympathy regarding the easy communication of information of common interest as of prime importance in strengthening the cohesion of the Empire. I have been in correspondence with the Western Union Telegraph Co. of the United States in connection with the leasing by that company of the cables of the Anglo-American Telegraph Co.," he cabled. "The cables of the Atlantic companies are fully employed during a few hours of the day, but less fully during the remaining hours.

"I am glad to be able to announce that, in view of this fact, the three companies referred to have consented to accept press messages which are not of urgent character and which may be postponed for more urgent traffic, at one-half of the present rates. For the present the deferment may be less, but will not be more than nineteen hours, reckoned from the time of acceptance in the country of origin to clock time of delivery in the country of destination, except that, where cables are congested, some further delay may be unavoidable. I have also obtained the consent of the Pacific Cable Board and of the Australian Government to a similar reduction of their charges for press messages of this class.

"The tariff of the New Zealand Government is already very low and a further diminuition is not asked. The effect will be that the rates on these deferred press telegrams between the United Kingdom on the one hand and Canada as well as the United States on the other, will be twopence halfpenny a word, instead of fivepence as now. And between the United Kingdom and Australia and New Zealand the rate will be fourpence halfpenny a word, instead of ninepence.

"I am in communication with the Commercial Cable Co. also on this question, but I regret I have not yet been able to arrange for a similar reduction in cablegrams to and from India and South Africa, but the Eastern Telegraph Co. has consented to carry Australiasian cablegrams at the reduced rate in the event of interruption to the Pacific cable. The service will come into full operation on the 15th inst., but the W. U. Anglo and direct United States companies will be prepared to accept press telegrams at the reduced rates at their own offices on and from to-morrow.

Lord Strathcona goes on to explain the new arrangement of the W. U. Telegraph Co., in regard to night and week-end letters.

"I am glad to say that negotiations which have been proceeding for some time with the cable companies for reducing by one half the rates for plain language on urgent cablegrams between the United Kingdom, India, the Dominion, the crown colonies and the United States, have proved successful, and the new arrangements will take effect on January 1 next."

Other Rates Cut Down.

London, Dec. 6.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In addition to his announcement that the cable rate to Canada would be twopence halfpenny a word, instead of fivepence, Postmaster Samuel stated that the Australian rate would be between the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand fourpence halfpenny instead of ninepence. The new rates would come into full operation on Dec. 15.

The Western Union intend instituting a system of night letters and week-end letters to Canada and the United States for delivery on the morning of the second day after being handed in at quarter the usual rates. A minimum charge of six shillings would be accepted Saturday for delivery at one-fifth the present rate.

C.N.O. to Change Line.

Toronto, Dec. 6.—Negotiations are now underway between the C.P.R. and the Canadian Northern, in which the latter company are endeavoring to acquire further running rights on the C.P.R. tracks at Orillia, which would enable them to travel around the north end of the town where they wish to branch off and run a line north connecting with their main line at a point near Sparrow Lake. The C.N.O. have already had a route map of this line approved of, and it is almost certain that when this section is completed it will become a part of the Toronto-Parry Sound line. The section from Udney to the point which the new line intersects will in all probability be used only for freight traffic.

House Adjourns To-morrow.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Premier Borden gave notice last night of a resolution providing for a Christmas adjournment from Dec. 7 to Jan. 10, and for extending the time for private bills to Feb. 15, without charge.

QUALITY, SKILL, & CARE,
THE LADDER BY WHICH WE CLIMB
To Those Requiring Glasses

Eight years is a short time in the life of man, but it is a period of sufficient length, in business, to carry with it a guarantee of honest effort and satisfaction.

For this number of years I have carried on an Optical business in this city and I have fitted thousands of people with glasses. The fact that I have been successful leads me to believe that my methods are right and for that reason, I wish to give you the additional assurance that there will be no change in them in the future. I am in a position to give you the best of everything that means eye comfort.

It is barely possible that you are in need of new lenses, frame or an eyeglass and I would ask that you give me the privilege of giving your eyes a scientific examination and of providing the glasses for you if you need them.

I exercise the greatest care in the examination and fitting of the glasses. I do not overlook the feature of making glasses which will add greatly to the personal appearance of those who wear them. In other words, every detail will have my most careful consideration.

I carry the largest up-to-date Optical Stock in Peterboro, and grind all my own lenses. You will incur no obligation by calling and consulting with me.

Facts About Motherhood

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at the time of child-birth, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when the strain is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

It isn't as though the experience came upon them unawares. They have ample time in which to prepare, but they, for the most part, trust to chance and pay the penalty.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy, and strong.

Any woman who would like special advice in regard to this matter is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her letter will be held in strict confidence.

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Angry! Why should I be? I am only happy to know that you never forgot—that you could not bear to destroy the only link that was left between us. Do you know, I am almost sorry that I spoke to you about this! We seem to have snatched an hour or two out of Paradise, and it is I who have stirred up the dark waters. Let us forget it for a few more minutes!"

He drew her away with him towards their seat under the trees. Wrayson looked across at Louise with a smile.

"You, too," he said. "May we not forget a little longer?"

She smiled at him sadly, and shook her head'

"No!" she answered. "With them it is different. I can scarcely yet realize that I have a brother—think what it must be to Emilie to have the man whom she loved come back from the grave. Listen!"

Outside they heard the sound of galloping horses—a moment later the Baron de Courcelles issued from the inn and crossed the lawn towards Madame de Melbain.

"Madame," he said, "the man who was caught in the park last night is, without doubt, a spy from Mexonia! He can be charged with nothing more serious than trespass, and in a few minutes he will be free. Should he return, this"—he glanced towards Duncan—"would be the end. I have a carriage waiting for you."

Madame de Melbain rose at once. With a little gesture of excuse she drew Duncan on one side.

"Wait here," she begged, "until you hear from me. Baron de Courcelles is my one faithful friend at Court. I am going to consult with him."

"I shall see you again?" he asked.

She hesitated.

"Is it wise?" she murmured. "If my enemies knew that you were alive, that I had seen you here, what chance should I have, do you think, before the courts?"

He bent over her hands.

"I have brought enough trouble upon you," he said simply. "I will wait! Only I hope that there will be work for me to do!"

CHAPTER XXXII.

"I asked you," the Baron remarked, helping himself to hors d'œuvres, "to dine with me here, because I fancy that the little inn at Etarpes is being closely watched. Always when one has private matters to discuss, I believe in a certain amount of publicity. Here we are in a quiet corner, it is true, but we are surrounded by several hundreds of other people. They are far too occupied with their own affairs to watch us. It is the last place, for instance, where our friend from Mexonia would dream of looking for us."

The three men were seated at a small round table in the great dining-room of the Hotel Splendide of Dinant-on-Sea. The season was at its height, and the room was full. On every side they were surrounded by chatting groups of English tourists and French holidaymakers. Outside on the promenade a band was playing, and a leisurely crowd was passing backwards and forwards.

"The lady whom we will continue, if you please, to call Madame de Melbain," the Baron continued, "has desired me to take you two gentlemen into our entire confidence. You are both aware that for eighteen months the suit for divorce brought by that lady's husband has been before a special court."

"One undersands," Wrayson remarked, "that the sympathies of all Europe are with—the lady."

The Baron bowed.

"Entirely. Her cause, too, is the popular one in Mexonia. It is the ministry and the aristocracy who are on the other side. These are anxious for an alliance which will safeguard Mexonia from certain dangers to which she is at present exposed. Madame de Melbain, as you are both aware, comes from one of the oldest families of Europe, but it is a family without any political significance. The betrothal was completed before Frederick stood so near to the throne. If his accession had seemed even a likely thing at the time, it would not have been sanctioned. I speak as the staunch friend of the lady whose cause is so dear to us, but I wish you to grasp the facts."

There was a brief pause whilst a fresh course was served by an apologetic and breathless waiter. The three men spoke together for a while on some chance subject. Then, when they were alone, the Baron continued.

"The court, although powerful influences were at work, found itself unable to pronounce the decree which those in authority so much desired. All that those who were behind the scenes could do was to keep the case open, hoping that while living apart from her husband, some trifling indiscretion on the part of Madame would afford them a pretext for giving the desired verdict. I need not say that, up to the present, no such indiscretion has occurred. But all the time we have been on the brink of a volcano!"

"The letters!" Duncan muttered.

The Baron nodded.

"About a year ago," he said, "Madame de Melbain received a terrifying letter from the miscreant into whose hands they had fallen. Madame very wisely made a confidant of me ,and, with the Baroness de Sturm, I left at once for London, and saw this man. I very soon persuaded myself that he had the letters and that he knew their value. He asked a sum for them which it was utterly impossible for us to pay."

"Did he explain," Duncan asked, "how they came into his hands?"

"He said that they were picked up on the battlefield of Colenso at first," the Baron declared. "Afterwards, he was brutally frank. You see your death was gazetted, a fact of which he was no doubt aware. He admitted that they had been given to him to destroy."

Duncan leaned across the table.

"Baron," he said, "who killed that man? He cheated me of my task, but I should like to know who it was."

"So would a great many more of us," the Baron answered. "The fact is, we are in the curious position of having an unknown friend."

"An unknown friend?" Duncan repeated.

The Baron nodded.

"We paid that man two thousand a year," he said, "but he was not satisfied. He communicated secretly with the other side, and they agreed to buy the letters for ten thousand pounds. We knew the very night when he had arranged to hand them over to a man named Bentham inLondon. But we were powerless. We could not have found the half of ten thousand pounds. One thing only was tried, and that very nearly ended in disaster. An attempt was made to steal the letters. Mr. Wrayson will tell you about that—presently."

A maitre d'hotel paused at their table to hope that messieurs were well served. In a season so busy it was not possible to give the attention to every one they would like! Was there anything he could do? Messieurs were drinking, he noticed, the best wine in the cellars. He trusted that they approved of it. The young lady there with the diamond collar and the wonderful eyes? He bent a little lower over the table. That was Mademoiselle Diane, of the Folies Bergeres! And the gentleman? He had registered under another name, but he was well known as the Baron X——, a great capitalist in Paris!

The maitre d'hotel passed on, well satisfied that he had interested the three distinguished looking gentlemen who dined alone. Wrayson, as soon as he was out of hearing, leaned over the table

"It is on that night," he said to Duncan, "that I come into touch with the affairs of which our friend has spoken. The man Barnes had a flat corresponding to mine on the floor above. I returned home about midnight and found a young lady, who was a complete stranger to me, engaged in searching my desk. I turned up the lights and demanded an explanation. She was apparently quite as much surprised to see me as I was to see her. It appeared that she had imagined herself in Barnes' flat. Whilst I was talking to her, the telephone bell rang. Some unknown person asked me to convey a message to Barnes. When I had finished she was gone. I sat down and tried to make head or tail of the affair. I couldn't. Barnes was a disreputable little bounder. This girl was a lady. What connection could there be between the two? I fancied what might happen if she were surprised by Barnes, and I determined not to go to bed until I heard her come down. I fell asleep over my fire, and I woke with a start to find her once more upon the threshold of my room. She was fainting—almost on the point of collapse. I gave her some brandy and helped her downstairs. At the door of the flat was a cab, and in it was the man Barnes, dead—murdered!"

The breath came through Duncan's teeth with a little hiss. One could fancy that he was wishing that his had been the hand to strike the blow. The Baron glanced round casually. He called a waiter and complained of the slow service, sent for another bottle of wine, and lit a cigarette.

"I think," he said, "that we will pause for a moment or so. Mr. Wrayson's narrative is a little dramatic! Ah! Mademoiselle la danseus goes! What a toilette!"

Mademoiselle favoured their table with particular regard as she passed out, and accepted with a delighted smile the fan which she dropped in passing, and which the Baron as speedily restored. He resumed his seat stroking his grey moustache.

"A very handsome young lady," he remarked. "I think that now we may continue."

"The girl?" Duncan asked quickly.

"Was your sister," Wrayson answered.

There was a moment's intense silence. Duncan was doing his best to look unconcerned, but the hand which played with his wineglass shook.

"How—was he murdered?"

"Strangled with a fine cord," Wrayson answered.

"In the cab?"

"There or inside the building! It is impossible to say."

"And no one was ever tried for the murder?"

"No one," Wrayson answered.

Duncan swallowed a glassful of wine.

"But my sister," he said, "was in his rooms—she might have seen him!"

"Your sister's name was never mentioned in the matter," Wrayson said. "I was the only witness who knew anything about her—and—I said nothing."

Duncan drew a little breath.

"An impulse," Wrayson answered. "I felt that she could not have been concerned in such a deed, and I felt that if I told all that I knew, she would have been suspected. So I said nothing. I saved her a good deal of trouble and anxiety I dare say, and I do not believe that I interfered in any way with the course of justice."

Duncan looked across the table and raised his glass.

"I should like to shake hands with you, Mr. Wrayson," he said, "only the Baron would have fits. You acted like a brick. I only hope that Louise is as grateful as she ought to be."

"My silence," Wrayson said, "was really an impulse. There have been times since when I have wondered whether I was wise. There are people now at work in London trying to solve the mystery of this murder. I acted upon the supposition that no one had seen your sister leave the flat except myself. I found afterwards that I was mistaken?"

The Baron leaned forward.

"One moment, Mr. Wrayson," he interrupted. "You have said that there are people in oLndon who are trying to solve the mystery of Barnes' death. Who are they?"

"One is the man's brother," Wrayson answered, "if possible, a more contemptible little cur than the man himself was. His only interest is to discover the source of his brother's income. He wants money! Nothing but money. The other is Heneage, and he is an acquaintance of my own, a barrister, and a man of education."

"Why does he interest himself in such an affair?" Duncan asked.

"Because the solution of such maters is a hobby of his," Wrayson answered. "It was he who saw your sister and I come out from the flat that morning. It was he who warned us both to leave England."

The Baron leaned forward in his chair.

"Forgive me, Mr. Wrayson," he said, "but there is a—lady at your right who seems anxious to attract your attention. We are none of us anxious to advertise our presence here. Is she, by any chance, a friend of yours?"

Wrayson looked quickly around. He understood at once the Baron's slight pause. The ladies of the French half-world are skilled enough, when necessary, in concealing their profession; their English sister, if she attempts it at all, attempts a hopeless task. Over powdered, over rouged, with hair at least two shades nearer copper coloured than the last time he had seen her, badly but showily dressed, it was his friend from the Alhambra whose welcoming smile Wrayson received with a thrill of interest. She was seated at a small table with a slightly less repulsive edition of herself, and her smile changed at once into a gesture of invitation. Wrayson rose to his feet almost eagerly.

"This is a coincidence," he said under his breath. "She, too, holds a hand in the game!"

CHAPTER XXXIII

The diners at the Hotel Splendide were a little surprised to see the tall, distinguished - looking Englishman leave his seat and accost with quiet deference the elder of the two women, whose entrance a few minutes before had occasioned a good many not very flattering comments. The lady who called herself Blanche meant to make the most of her opportunity.

"Fancy meeting you here," she remarked. "Flo, this is a friend of mine. Mrs. Harigood! Gentlemen's name doesn't matter, does it?" she added, laughing.

Wrayson bowed, and murmured something inaudible. Blanche's friend regarded him with unconcealed and flattering approval.

"Over here for a little flutter, I suppose?" she remarked. "It was so hot in town we had to get away somewhere. Are you alone with your friends?"

"Quite alone," Wrayson answered "We are only staying for a day or two."

The lady nodded.

"We shall stay for a week if we like it," she said. "If not, we shall go to Dieppe. Did you get my letter?"

"Letter!" Wrayson repeated. "No! Have you written to me?"

Would Fall In a Faint

The Feeble, Wasted Nerves Were Restored and Revitalized by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nervous prostration is a terrible disease to all who understand its symptoms. At times the sufferer feels comparatively well, but with slight exertion the dreadful helplessness returns and all strength and vitality seems to leave the system.

This letter from Mrs. Martin very well describes the terrible conditions in which many a sufferer finds herself. She also tells how she regained health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after all other treatments had failed.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition from nervous exhaustion and prostration. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. The weakness was so great that I could not so much as sweep the floor without fainting, but the nerve food helped me after the doctors failed. It has done wonders in building up my nervous system. I can do my own housework now and washing, and feel that this great medicine has been a God-send to me. I think it is the best of medicines."

MIXED MARRIAGES WERE NUMEROUS

Surprising Statistics for the Past Year---Some Curious Matches

The report of the Registrar-General for Ontario for the past year shows, among other interesting facts, that inter-marriage between persons of different religions is very much more frequent than is popularly supposed. Methodists married Roman Catholics, Jews married Gentiles, and Church of England adherents allied themselves in matrimony with persons of Salvation Army persuasion.

Last year there were 7,851 Roman Catholics married in Ontario. Of these 1,509 married out of their own denomination. Of these, again, 665 Roman Catholic grooms married Protestant brides, and 344 Roman Catholic women became wives of non-Catholic men. The greater number of these marriages were between Roman Catholics and members of the Anglican Church. The next denominations with which most Roman Catholic persons allied themselves were the Presbyterians, the Baptists and the Lutherans, in the order named. It is remarkable to observe that there were no marriages between Roman Catholics and members of the Salvation Army, while on the other hand two Roman Catholic grooms took unto themselves Hebrew brides, and five Roman Catholic girls threw in their lot with Jewish young men.

How the Hebrews Married.

Two Jews married Anglicans; two, Presbyterians; six, Methodists; two, Baptists; one, a Congregationalist, and four married persons who are described as having no particular religious convictions. Hebrew women, apparently, had a tendency to fall in love with Anglicans, for of the seven Jewesses married out of their faith five went to Anglicans and two to Roman Catholics.

Upon further investigation of the blue book it appears that 631 Presbyterian women married Anglicans, 841 married Methodists, 126 married Roman Catholics, 41 married Congregationalists, 55 married Lutherans and seventy-four married persons whose religious beliefs were not set down.

Of the Methodist brides 678 took Anglican husbands, 910 took Presbyterians, 157 accepted Roman Catholics, 290 favored Baptists, 57 fell to Congregationalists, 88 picked Lutherans, six consented to cook for Salvation Army members and 98 took husbands whose faith was not classified. Of these, it is said, 25 had no religion. Among the Baptist women 200 chose mates from the Anglican Church, 218 from the Presbyterians 362 from the Methodists, 88 from Roman Catholics, 21 from Congregationalists, 26 from the Lutherans, 28 from unbaptised worshippers and six from the denominationally unattached. Fifty-seven Lutherans secured Anglican husbands, 71 Presbyterians, 78 Methodists, 35 Roman Catholics, one a Hebrew and one a Salvationist. Of the Salvation Army lassies 87 found affinities in the "Army"; three married Anglicans; one, a Presbyterian; seven Methodists; five, Baptists, and one an unclassified.

Ages of the Couples.

It is of interest to observe that, so far as Ontario is concerned, men do not to any great extent marry later than women, although it is popularly thought otherwise. Last year 8,168 grooms, or about one-third of the total number (24,036), married between the ages of twenty and twenty four. Forty-seven per cent. of the brides were between those ages. In the case of both sexes the next greatest number married between the ages of twenty-five and twenty-nine and after that the large classification are between thirty and thirty-four for grooms and between fifteen and nineteen for brides.

Just 453 men were married under the age of twenty. One of these took a 32-year-old bride; another took a 38-year-old; two men between twenty and twenty-four married brides of between forty and forty four; one married a lady of the discreet age of 70, while two grooms of forty and forty-four married women of the same ages. Fifteen women between the ages of fifteen and nineteen married men between forty and forty-four; two married men between forty-five and forty-nine: one took a man over 55, and one a man over 60. Three women between twenty and twenty-four married men over 55, two married men over sixty and one a man over 70. One woman of twenty-seven married a man of 70.

June is still the month for brides. There were 3,555 out of the 24,036 marriages celebrated in June. September and December folowed with 2,652 and 2,304 marriages respectively.

INVALUABLE TO EVERY FARMER

Its Wonderful Power in Curing Sick Cattle and Colicky Horses Makes "Nerviline" Worth Its Weight in Gold.

The stockman or farmer that doesn't know of the thousand and one uses of "Nerviline" around the stable has a great deal to learn. "Why, I wouldn't think of locking my stable door at night without knowing I had a supply of 'Nerviline' on hand. I always get a dozen bottles at a time from my druggist. To cure colic, indigestion and bad stomach in a horse or cow there is no remedy on earth in the same class as 'Nerviline.' Last summer I had a $250 horse that got the scours and I would have lost him if I hadn't been able to give him Nerviline. I poured a full bottle of Nerviline in a pint of water down his throat and saved his life. I know of neighbors who have saved many heads of valuable stock stricken with colic, just by using Nerviline. It is equally good as a rub-on liniment, and I know from my experience that for man or beast, internally or externally, 'Nerviline' is worth a dollar a drop.—James E. McCullough, Stock Breeder, etc."

You will not regret using Nerviline, but be sure to get it and not something else. 25c per bottle or five for $1.00 at all dealers or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

SHOULD BE RAISING SHEEP

To the Tune of Eighty Millions, Whereas We Have Less Than Two Millions

Canada should be carrying 80,000,000 sheep. Instead, the figures are less than 2,000,000, that number being 1,000,000 less than twelve years ago. Mr. W. T. Ritch, special commissioner to the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, with Mr. W. A. Dryden, have been conducting an inquiry into the causes of comparative failure of the sheep raising industry in the Dominion. As an instance of the varying conditions of different countries, it is shown that, whereas in Australia sheep are principally raised for their wool, the value of the sheep apart from its wool is no more on on an average than 10 shillings, or about $2.50, while here it is a poor sheep that will not fetch $6 at least. There is a great demand for mutton-sheep in New England, so that last year 26,000 sheep were exported to Boston from Prince Edward Island alone, and many more from the other Maritime Provinces. Yet all the time the Canadian farmer has been neglecting the certain revenue that awaited him to raise wool rather than mutton. The following instance of the prevailing ignorance among sheep farmers is given to show how much must be done before better results can be hoped for. In Ontario wool is sold for from 14 to 15 cents a pound. In the Maritime Provinces they still follow the custom that obtained in England in the days of hand-loom weaving. The wool is first shorn and then tub-washed, after which it is sold for 22 to 24 cents a pound. The farmers openly boast of the superiority of their wool to that grown further west, forgetful that it has shrunk in the process of tub-washing quite 40 per cent., so that Ontario wool is really the more profitable. Other important matters on which the report will touch are the better administration of the dog laws, and the improvement of fencing in the eastern provinces, to obviate the heavy losses that now take place from dogs worrying the sheep; and last though not least, the necessity for the proper classification of wool, at which the farmers too often laugh as a fad, forgetful that in Australia an expert wool-classer often makes $5,000 a year. In Canada the farmers are obtaining no more for the first fleeces than for subsequent shearings, or far fine wool than they do for coarse.

Caught a Huge Bass

On the Seneca River, Philip Fiske, of Syracuse, hooked a black bass weighing four and three-quarter pounds. He had plenty of delicate work to do before he landed this beauty. Four others, good ones though smaller than the one mentioned, were brought in at the same place shortly afterwards.

WOMEN TO BECOME CIVIL ENGINEERS

Two Girls Have Made Application for Entrance to the Famous Parisian School

Two girls at the Lycee Buffon, Paris, are preparing for the entrance examination to the famous school, the Polytechnique, which is the "finishing master" of the leading civil and military engineers. If they are admitted it will be one more triumph for feminism and a considerable source of embarrassment to the school itself. Obviously the easier way would be to refuse the ladies on some technical pretext; this, however, would not be what is termed "an elegant solution." It would smack of masculine prejudice and egotism. The founders of the school which played its part in Revolutionary times and was always flattered by Napoleon who was a little afraid of its independent spirit, is the bread-and-butter miss, to its courtyards and class-rooms. This is obvious from the gay military uniform worn by the students and from the circumstance that military discipline rules in the school itself. The young men turn out of bed to a roll of drums; a bugle summons them to meals or precedes an important announcement by the general in command.

If the young ladies succeed in becoming "Polytechniciennes," something like a revolution in the habits and customs of this centre will result. The school songs, which are not always intended for delicate ears, and have a bluff and martial tone, will have to be suppressed and others, innocuous in character, put in their place. Again, the female applicants cannot obviously, be called upon to perform military service and in consequence, the regulations must be changed to meet the case.

Just as the admission of women to the Prix de Rome caused perturbation amongst the students in the Eternal City, so this proposal to give the highest technical training to women mathematicians is accompanied by fear for old traditions and of complications with the particularly masculine environment of the school

One does not forget, in this connection, that students from the Polytechnique fought in the trenches in the siege of Paris, and when officers were shot down they led the citizens in resistance. Yet their history has had the democratic touch that renders the institution particularly popular to the Parisian crowd. For, notwithstanding the roll of drums and other Napoleonic signs of militarism, the school heart has beaten with the people rather than with their governors, and, in the various changes of regime, during the past hundred years, it has shown a tendency towards street adventure and the barricade. To-day almost every engineer of mark comes from this school, and the excessively theoretical character of its teaching is reproached for many brilliant failures. Cynics declare that the Liberte explosion and other disasters of the sort are due to the impracticable formulae adopted by Polytechnicians.

DEER IN NEW ZEALAND

Mr. F. W. Godsal, one of the Provincial Fire Guardians stationed at Cowley, Alta., has a photograph of the head and antlers of a red deer stag the interest being greatly heightened by the fact that this particular stag was sent from Windsor Park to New Zealand in 1867 by the late Prince Consort. At this time the stag was three years old and ten years later was shot, by request, by Major Campbell, as he was becoming dangerous. It will interest Canadian readers to know that in 1908 no less than 2,000 deer were killed at one station in order to reduce their numbers. The deer indeed have increased in New Zealand until they have become a nuisance and their horns grow to a size unknown in Great Britain. A further item of interest is found in the fact that trout introduced from England grow to an enormous size and increase rapidly [illegible] streams of New [illegible]

AEROPLANES IN WAR THEIR POSSIBILITIES

Colonel Capper Gives an Interesting Estimate Regarding Bomb Dropping by an Aeroplane Fleet

Colonel J. E. Capper, a military aviation expert in England, has given a very interesting interview regarding the possibilities of the aeroplane in warfare.

"Fifty machines," he said, "making two trips each per day, within a radius of a hundred miles, could drop each day 15,000 pounds, or about six and a half tons of bombs, on any selected area." Colonel Capper, however, does not think much damage could be done by single machines, but remarks that several flying squadrons of ten or a dozen machines would prove of the highest importance during a campaign.

The question naturally arises: What about the cost of such fleets? If numbers were ordered, the average price for a military machine would be about $3,000. The cost of a fleet of a hundred flying machines would, therefore, be about $300,000. Portable sheds, workshops, etc., could be provided and fitted up for about $100,000, and, allowing a similar amount for expenditure on flying grounds, motor-cars, etc., an initial expenditure of $500,000 would suffice for the provision of a fleet of a hundred flying machines. The upkeep would be about $300,000 per annum, and providing for, say, forty new machines annually would cost $120,000.

Repairs and upkeep of those in use fuel, etc., would be liberally provided for at $80,000, so that an original outlay of $500,000 and an annual grant of $500,000 would suffice for the provision in peace of a fleet of a hundred flying machines, including the renewal of the whole fleet every two and a half years.

It has been suggested that it would be an easy matter to destroy a squadron of flying machines with artillery or infantry fire. As a matter of fact it would be extremely difficult to do so if the machines were flying at any fair height. It must be remembered that the flying machine travels from fifty to seventy miles an hour, and it is obvious that a hit in such circumstances would be very difficult to secure, even by the best artillery in the world.

Moreover, quick-firing guns have but a small angle of elevation, and even a field howitzer could hardly hope that its shells would reach a height of 3,000 feet, so that it a very considerable height a flying machine would be absolutely immune.

"But what about meeting the attacks of other flying machines?" some reader may ask. For this purpose, says Colonel Capper, every military flying machine must be armed with a quick-firing small-bore gun or rifle, and the aeronaut must be trained to use it whilst in rapid flight. In addition, a few small deadly explosive bombs should be carried for the destruction of hostile airships.

Airships will be of little use in warfare when it comes to fighting flying machines. They are slow in speed, and are not calculated to manoeuvre at heights much over 6,000 feet, and even by sacrifice of all fuel and ballast can hardly reach 10,000 feet, a height which flying machines can speedily attain. No airship will be able to engage in war without a small squadron of flying machines to guard her, and in a fight between flying machines the victory will go to that which can fly and rise fastest, manoeuvre easiest, and shoot the straight est.

DUKE'S PRIVATE INCOME

In Addition to Salary He Has Annual Income of $125,000

There are only a few wealthier men in the Dominion at the present time than His Royal Highness, the new Governor-General. In addition to the salary Canada will pay him, the Duke enjoys a yearly income of $125,000 which was settled on him for life by the British Parliament because of his being one of the younger sons of the late Queen Victoria. Nor does this exhaust the amount of his income from official sources, for he also draws some $25,000 annually as Field Marshal in the British Army.

Besides his revenue from official sources, the Duke of Connaught enjoys the returns from his share of the estate left by his mother, Queen Victoria, the total value of which has never become known to the general public. That the whole estate was very large is common belief, rumor estimating the Duke's share at varying amounts from five to fifteen million dollars. It is said in well-informed circles that his income is greater than that of King George.

CANADA'S GREAT FUTURE

Former Vice-President of the U. S. Expresses His Admiration

Canada has "an unparalleled future, according to former vice-president of the United States, Chas. W. Fairbanks. "Why, you people have just commenced to build a nation," he said, "and judging the future by the past and taking into consideration your marvellous resources, the greatest on earth, I have in my mind's eye the position Canada will occupy among the earth's great nations."

THAT NUMBER "13"

The Duke of Connaught Is Apparently Not Afraid of It

It is to be presumed that His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, is not superstitious. If he were, or if Her Royal Highness, the Duchess, had any personal aversion to the much-maligned number "13," it is doubtful if their Excellencies would have consented to set foot on Canadian shores on Friday, the thirteenth day of October. For even royalties are human, and human frailty is at no time more visible than when old acquaintances, in the guise of time-honored superstitions, are brought to mind.

Apparently men are no more exempt from a dislike to the tabooed number than women; and in hotels the average between guests of both sexes who refuse to be placed in a room labelled "13," is struck pretty fairly. Cases have also come to the notice of hotel managers, in which new "bell-hops" have objected to wearing upon the surface of their spick and span liveries the little badge of metal by which they were expected to become known to the office as "No. 13."

In police circles the robust individuals who are known to the public as the "arms of the law" take the unhappy number as philosophically as they march the newest victim of funny water off to the cooler; but civilians who have found themselves inside the fast-locked door of Cell No. 13 have been known to consider themselves exceedingly unlucky.

Great Britain's barley acreage has decreased by 130,734 acres this year.

TELLS OF LEPROSY

How the Problem Is Dealt with In India

Sir Andrew Fraser, addressing a Toronto audience, gave the history of leprosy as follows: "The disease is bad only in parts of India. The old system of handling lepers was to segregate them in places by themselves. More recently the Government took hold of the matter, andn prepared Government asylums for them, which were really jails. To this system I was strongly opposed, because the disease is so loathsome that the asylum wardens would give them no care, and they suffered from filth and neglect. The situation needed missionary sacrifice."

Sir Andrew tried an experiment, by establishing a home, to which they could come, and from which they could go at will. He found that they did not leave—it meant prison and neglect if they did, whereas at the home their wounds were dressed, their rooms were clean, and the gospel of hope was preached to them. It was a happy experience to him, he said, to visit these homes ,for there were many now, and to see content written on the faces of those poor wretches.

"I wish to intimate to you what service the missionaries are doing, who attend these people, when I tell you solemnly that I would not touch a leper."

"But the best service we do the lepers in our missions," he proceeded, "is that we spare the little children from the woe and misery of their parents, by separating them and caring for the children. The disease is not inherited, though it is very contagious. These children are brought up in health, and in the knowledge of the love of Christ, to useful lives."

"The lepers of India are estimated at 250,000; the missions, which number 79, care for or assist 10,000 of these. There are now 3,700 church members. In a word, the missions give shelter to the leper, for he is an outcast; food, for he is often starving; medical treatment for the alleviation of their suffering; and, finally, Christian teaching and sympathy, for of all men they are the most hopeless. Twenty-five dollars a year does all this for an adult in India; $20 a year supports and educates a untainted child in India."

A NEW MOUNTAIN WORLD

Remarkable Grandeur of the Scenery Along the Grand Trunk Pacific

Mr. A. O. Wheeler, director of the Canadian Alpine Club, states in his last report that the territory in the vicinity of the head waters of the Athabasca and Whirlpool rivers offers a field for exploration and research, mountaineering and camping, that is absolutely new, and of which practically nothing is known. This group of mountains, through which the Grand Trunk Pacific railway will pass, is magnificent. It rises approximately to 12,000 feet above sea level, and shows contours of the wildest and boldest possible forms. Immense snowfields and huge glaciers are everywhere. Boldest and most inaccessible rise the awful black precipices of Mount Geikie, the central point of the group. Again to the south are an endless array of peaks, towers, pyramids, domes, castles and ramparts, in bewildering confusion. An attempt was made to identify the much talked of giants, — Columbia, Bryce, Lyall, Forbes, etc.,—but in the chaotic whole it could not be done with any certainty. The Grand Trunk Pacific station formerly known as Fiddle Creek, mile 997.8 west of Winnipeg, has been changed to Mietto Hot Springs. It will be in this locality that the first of the Grand Trunk Pacific mountain hotels will be erected, and is within seven or eight miles of the famous Hot Springs that are situated just beyond the famous Roche Mietto Mountain which looms up to the west of this station.

When an express from Germany reached the frontier station two Japanese, one attired in feminine garments, were searched by the Customs House Officers. The smuggler was not released until a fine of $40 had been paid.

Dyspepsia is one of the most prevalent troubles of civilized life, and thousands of people suffer untold agony after every meal, for nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. Mrs. Wm. J. "For five years I had been a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and tried different doctors and proprietary medicines, but could get no relief. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. YOUNG MEN HELD.

Hamiltonians Charged With Complicity In Robbery.

Hamilton, Dec. 6.—Two further arrests were made yesterday in the mysterious Canadian Express robbery, when Douglas Chilman, 140 Bold street, was taken into custody at his home at seven o'clock yesterday morning, by Plain Clothesman Goodman, while at about the same hour, Joseph Acheson, a friend of Chilman, living at 124 Duke street, was arrested by Constable McKay.

Both men were in bed when arrested, and as soon as they could dress, were taken to the central police station. They appeared before Magistrate Jelfs in the police court a few hours later, and were remanded for eight days, at the request of Crown Attorney Washington, who stated that the police were not quite ready to go on with the case.

Bail in the sum of $18,000 was set in the case of each prisoner.

Chilman was at one time a clerk in the Canadian Express Co.'s offices, and was employed there temporarily a short time before the robbery was committed. He has been under surveillance for several weeks, by a Thiel detective, brought into the case at the instance of Deputy Chief of Police Whatley, who has been quietly working on the case ever since the charges against Hughes and Kennough fell through.

Acheson has also been closely watched by the Thiel operative, and two women detectives are also said to be engaged in trying to trap the two suspects. Monday afternoon the deputy chief decided that he was in possession of sufficient evidence to justify the arrest of the suspected men, and warrants were accordingly sworn out.

The police are extremely reticent about the evidence they have against Chilman and Acheson, and will say but little about the case.

The accused men are each twenty-two years old, and both are well known in the city. Chilman is the proprietor of the Regal confectionery on King street west, which he bought, soon after severing his connection with the express company. Acheson recently resigned a position as traveler with the Simmons Fuel Co., to engage in the electrical supply business, but a few weeks ago disposed of this business, and at the time of his arrest was employed with the Canadian Reflector Co. Chilman was also a friend of Constable Goodman, who arrested him yesterday.

The prisoners were unable to raise the heavy bail named by the crown, and spent the night in the central police station cells. C. W. Bell represented the accused men in the Police Court yesterday, and he and Geo. Lynch-Staunton, will defend them when their cases came to trial.

The crime in question was committed on the morning of Sept. 28 last, and consists of the theft of more than $8,000 from the vault in the local office of the Canadian Express Co. When one of the drivers arrived at the office on the morning of that day, he discovered George Kennough, night clerk for the company, bound and gagged, lying on the floor in the vault.

To the police Kennough said that while sitting at his desk he had suddenly been seized by three masked men, and that after the men secured the package containing the money, he was bound, gagged, and thrown into the vault. He could give no satisfactory description of the alleged robbers, and certain discrepancies in his story led to his arrest, for complicity in the theft. John W. Hughes, another ex-employe of the company, was also arrested on a nominal charge of vagrancy, in connection with the case. After two remands, both men were discharged for want of evidence against them, but Kennough was convicted on another charge of stealing $15 from the company, and sentenced to three months in jail.

Rowell at Brantford.

Brantford, Dec. 6.—The Liberals of South Brant were addressed here last night by N. W. Rowell, Liberal leader, at a meeting in the Grand Opera House. Mr. Rowell did not supplement his previous addresses with anything new, dealing with what he regarded as main issues of the campaign, including New Ontario developments, reconstruction of educational system by re-establishing county model schools, taxation reform and the bilingual school question.

Other addresses were delivered by Charles B. Heyd, Lloyd Harris, ex-M.P., and the candidate, Ald. Harris. John Muir was chairman. The attendance at the meeting was good and the speakers were well received.

Fear for King's Safety.

London, Dec. 6.—Much anxiety is reflected in official circles in London over the coming Durbar ceremonies. Before the King left England there were many people in whose opinion the King's visit to India did not seem advisable, owing to the many outrages which have occurred recently in that country.—This feeling has been revived by the news of fires in Delhi, although there is no proof yet that the outbreaks were of incendiary origin.

Delhi, India, Dec. 6.—During a rehearsal of the King's state entry yesterday, still another fire occurred. A large store on the banks of the River Junna, filled with fireworks, was completely destroyed.

WANTS FEDERAL BOARD.

Taft In Message to Congress Discusses Trust Evil.

Washington, Dec. 6.—President Taft's third annual message to Congress, devoted exclusively to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and the trust question in general, was read in Congress yesterday.

The feature of the message is the recommendation for the establishment of a federal corporation commission, and after noting that the drafting of the recent decrees in the dissolution of trusts, with a view to their reorganization into legitimate corporations, has made it especially apparent that the courts are not provided with the administrative machinery to make the necessary enquiries preparatory to reorganization. The President says:

"I do not set forth in detail the terms and sections of a statute which might supply the constructive legislation permitting and aiding the formation of combinations of capital into federal corporations. They should be subject to rigid rules as to their organization and procedure, including effective publicity, and to the closest supervision as to the issue of stock and bonds by an executive bureau or commission in the Department of Commerce and Labor, to which in times of doubt they might well submit their proposed plans for future business.

"It must be distinctly understood that incorporation under a federal law could not exempt the company thus formed and its incorporators and managers from prosecution under the Anti-Trust Law for subsequent illegal conduct, but the publicity of its procedure and the opportunity for frequent consultation with the bureau or commission in charge of the incorporation as to legitimate purpose of its transactions would offer it as great security against successful prosecutions for violations of the law as would be practical or wise."

Deny Italian Atrocities.

New York, Dec. 6.—Il Giornale Italiano of this city has received a cablegram from Tripoli, that has a bearing on the allegations of Italian atrocities at that place. The message is dated Dec. 5, it is signed by the correspondents of two English and two French newspapers and is as follows:

"The correspondents whose signatures follow witnessed the events in Tripoli from Oct. 23 to Oct. 30, and they affirm that the Italian soldiers have not been guilty of the atrocities they have been accused of by some newspapers; also that the executions ordered have been but the necessary repression of a pre-arranged revolt among the Arabs, who had previously submitted to the Italians. The undersigned affirm further that Moslems perpetrated on Christian prisoners and wounded atrocious tortures and mutilations.

"I await punishment, but as I am contemplating a voyage I request you to transmit it as soon as possible."

In communicating a copy of the message to The Temps, the princess explains that by the word "you," she means King Alfonso and the Minister.

Job Harriman Routed.

Los Angeles, Dec. 6.—Alexander, good Government candidate for mayor, was re-elected yesterday by an overwhelming majority over Job Harriman, Socialist. The count of ballots at 8.30 o'clock in 76 precincts out of a total of 317 gave Alexander 27,999, and Harriman 10,554.

This shows a gain for Alexander of about 3 to 1, compared with the primary vote.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N.Y.

bought a bottle and began to get better from the start, and for the past six months I have had scarcely any pain and am able to walk as well as ever." J.H. SANDERS,
P. O. box 5, Rockaway, N. J.

Few medicines are of any benefit for rheumatism, but Mr. Sanders tells plainly what Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine did for it. One ounce of salicylate of soda added to one bottle of Nervine makes an excellent remedy for rheumatism, which is now known to be a nervous disease and therefore subject to the influence of a medicine that acts through the nerves, as does

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Sufferers from rheumatism seldom fail to find relief in the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine, with salicylate of soda.

Sold under a guarantee that assures the return of the price of the first bottle if it fails to benefit. At all Druggists.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—Cables from the United Kingdom and the continent on Manitoba spring wheat came weaker, and the prices bid showed a decline of 1d to 2d per quarter, but at this reduction the demand was good, and, as prices in Winnipeg closed lower, a fair amount of business was worked. The demand from foreign buyers for oats is increasing, but the bids are out of line. In sympathy with the weakness in Winnipeg during the past two days, prices on spot have declined ½c to ½c, but at this reduction the demand was fair.

The export demand for bran is good. Cheese is quiet. Butter is fairly active and strong at a further advance in prices of ½c per pound. No Deal With Hon. Mr. Graham.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—When asked yesterday if the report was correct that an agreement had been reached to allow Hon. George P. Graham to be elected by acclamation in the federal constituency of South Renfrew, Hon. J. D. Reid and Hon. Frank Cochrane both denied that any such arrangement had been made. If such a compact was entered into, it was without the knowledge or consent of the Government.

"Varsity" New Stadium.

The intercollegiate football teams which will visit Toronto this year in the annual games will find that the oval at Toronto University has been wholly transformed and brought into line with the most up-to-date athletic fields in the Canadian college circuit. The college authorities have spent $45,000 on shifting the oval a few feet south in order to give room for a cinder path, have laid down a very excellent path, enclosed the grounds from street view by an eight-foot concrete wall, erected a grandstand with a seating capacity of 3,500 and bleachers to accommodate another 3,500, thus increasing the seating capacity by 7,000. The space under the grandstand has been utilized for ticket and executive offices, dressing-rooms, shower-baths, etc., and these are being equipped with the most modern devices for the pleasure and comfort of the college athletes and their visitors.

Versatile Miss Ashwell.

Miss Lena Ashwell, the Canadian girl who has made such a fine reputation for herself on the English stage, is to appear, for some time, at least, in the London music halls. In other words, she is going to try vaudeville for a while.

When Miss Ashwell last appeared in the Dominion, she was not seen to advantage, both her role and her play as a whole being of an impossible and dreary description. What she will do in the "halls" we can't imagine, as her bent is for the quiet sort of emotional acting, which is not appreciated by everybody. However, Miss Ashwell is a musician as well as an actress, and perhaps she will make use of that talent. This clever Toronto woman is very versatile. She has even written a novel.

"George" and "Double George."

The issue of Canadian gold coins which will be out in the course of a few weeks, will bear King George's head on one side, and on the other the Canadian coat of arms.

The dies are now on the way from England, and coining will be commenced as soon as they arrive in the capital.

The designs for the five and ten dollar pieces are practically the same. The five will be generally known as a "George," and the ten as a "Double George."

Girl Cured of Disfiguring Pimples

By Cuticura Ointment. Broke Out on Face when Twelve or Thirteen. Were Most Embarrassing. Had Tried Everything.

A Nova Scotia girl, Miss Mabel Morash, of Dover West, writes: "When I was about twelve or thirteen years of age, my face broke out with pimples, and I tried everything to get rid of them, but failed. The pimples were the worst on my forehead and chin. They came out in groups and developed later into sores. Being on my face they caused great disfigurement, and were most embarrassing.

"After trying so many remedies without success, I saw the Cuticura Ointment advertised, and I sent for a box. I then applied it to the pimples, and in a week I saw a great change in my face. I kept using it, and in a few months it rendered a complete cure. Now you cannot tell I ever had pimples, thanks to the Cuticura Ointment." (Signed) Miss Mabel Morash, Mar. 31, 1911.

Baby's Face Like Raw Beef

"My baby boy had a large pimple come on his forehead. It burst and spread all over his face which soon looked like a piece of raw beef, all smothered with bad pimples. It was awful to look at. The poor little thing used to scratch it and cry terribly. I took him to a doctor but he only got worse until I was quite frightened that he would always be disfigured. Then I got two tins of Cuticura Ointment, together with Cuticura Soap, and in two months had quite cured him. Now of course I use Cuticura Soap for all my children (Signed) Mrs. E. Perry, 99, Waterloo Rd., Aldershot, England, May 21, 1910.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, but to those who have suffered much, lost hope and are without faith in any treatment, a liberal sample of each with a 32-p. booklet on the skin and scalp will be mailed free, on application. THE WHY OF THE COWBOY HANDKERCHIEF

"Have you ever wondered why the cowboy pictures of Frederic Remington and other painters who have made a study of Western life depict the man of the plains with his red bandanna half way down on his chest instead of fitting snugly around his neck?" queried C. L. McKinlay, a ranch owner of California, brother of Representative McKinlay.

"I'll tell you. When a cowboy starts on a long ride over the plains one of his principal annoyances is having to wipe dust from his eyes. His heavy gauntlets make it impossible to use his hands, and he ties his handkerchief loosely around his neck, and when occasion requires uses it to clear his eyes. It is the most convenient place to carry the handkerchief while riding a horse."
—From the Washington Post.

ABSENCE

When my love was away,
Full three days were not sped,
I caught my fancy astray,
Thinking if she were dead.

And I alone, alone:
It seemed in my misery
In all the world was none
Ever so lone as I.

I wept, but it did not shame
Nor comfort my heart; away
I rode as I might, and came
To my love at close of day.

The sight of her stilled my fears,
My fairest-hearted love:
And yet in her eyes were tears:
Which when I questioned of,

"O now thou art come," she cried,
"'Tis fled; but I thought to-day
I never could here abide,
If thou wert longer away."
—Robert Seymour Bridges.

THE BLIZZARD

I like sunshine and skies of blue,
And roses blooming by the door;
I'm keen for pansies wet with dew,
But I also like the blizzard's roar.
And I don't object to a winter day
When a good old snowstorm comes our way.

I like the trees with their gentle shade,
When the sun is high and the days are warm,
And the song birds sing their serenade,
But I don't object to the good old storm;
And I like along through the drifted snow
With a cheery face and a glad "Hello."

I like good luck to come my way,
And I'm glad when fortune smiles on me;
Success can cheer me any day,
And I like the days when I'm trouble free
But when blizzards come and things go wrong
I'm blamed if I'm going to mope along.

FEMININE GENTLENESS

Are the old ideals of womanhood dead?

Most modern girls, if asked, the question, "What adjective do you wish might describe you?" would answer, "attractive," "charming," "brilliant," "intellectual," but how many of them would aspire to "gentleness?" Yet all through the ages men have admired the gentle woman. Tennyson gives us Enid and Elaine—the first won her husband by a sweet acquiescence to his harsh demands; the second made Launcelot sigh for that which he could not possess because of his unholy passion for the queen. Dickens gives us "Little Dorrit" and "Little Nell" and "Agnes," and a dozen others who have swayed things their way not by arrogance, but by the power of tenderness and faithfulness.

I wonder if some of the problems of marriage would be solved if wives would bring to bear the sweet charity which is not weakness or meekness. For it does not follow that because a woman is gentle she lacks force. Some of the gentlest women the world has ever known have been those who held firmly to their rights, just as some of the gentlest men have ruled others powerfully. Such people employ no militant methods. They do not argue or scold to gain their ends—by love and sympathy and graceful dignity they rule their little kingdoms.

The old-fashioned woman, never swerving from her ideal of right, often won her tyrannical husband to her own opinion, not because she forced upon him her own convictions, but because with steadfast tenderness she held him to the best that was in him. Her prayers, her devotion, her belief that he would come up to her ideal, these were the weapons with which she fought her domestic battles.

While I believe in a woman's right to stand side by side with her husband, mentally as well as morally and spiritually, I also believe that, as strength is the masculine, so gentleness is the feminine ideal. Who are the wives who attain their ends? Not those who indulge in constant battle or in bitter recrimination.

"But," I hear somebody say, "if I yield too much, my individuality will be submerged." Surely not. The successful wives of great men have not been the Xantippes or the Jane Carlyles; but rather those devoted creatures who were content to be the inspiration rather than the scourge of their husbands' existences.

Yet all of you cannot marry men of power, and your problem has to do with the average man. Look at it this way, therefore. Are you happy? Is your marriage a success? Why not? Does the fault all belong to your husband? Have you ever tried to see what peace and quiet and comfort would do to bring back your romance? Or do you upbraid, and weep and wail, and demand that which he cannot give, because you are not loveworthy?

Goethe having had many loves, used to refer to his wife as "A convenient loaf of brown bread." I can see your eyes flash when I say "Why not?" Yet there is nothing so satisfying as wholesome brown bread; it sustains where froth would kill. With reference to this remark of Goethe's, a writer comments: "If you are a loaf of brown bread, thank God; but do not pretend you are a frosted cake or a plum pudding. You will surely disappoint somebody, and there will be for you a day of reckoning. The clerk at the ribbon counter may be won by frosted cake with frills, sprinkled with red sanded sugar and caraway seeds, but not the man of power; he wants brown bread."—D. M.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. A CO-OPERATIVE SEAMSTRESS

A company of six busy women save much time and labour by engaging the same seamstress to come to each one of them one day a week the year around—each woman having a regular day.

When a hole is found, a button off, a seam ripped, a dress to be let down, each article is laid aside in a large basket for the mending day. Patches, buttons, thread, and other needed materials are hunted up at once and folded in each garment. On the outside of each is pinned a paper with directions. Thus always the stitch in time saves nine, no work goes from week to week, and if one mother has an invitation out on mending day, she can go, because the seamstress knows the house and has her directions before her.

Try it, and you will find that by having the same woman to sew regularly one day each week you will accomplish wonders.—From Woman's Home Companion.

BURY YOUR TROUBLES DEEP

Women like to talk of their troubles. They want sympathy, advice, commendation, and they go out of their way to get it. But a man, unless he has a streak of the feminine in him, squares his shoulders and bears his burden alone.

It is perhaps because of this self-control in men that women think of themselves as down-trodden. They find their sufferings analyzed in fiction and in fact, and they do not realize that their passion for self revelation works injustice to the other sex.

Men rarely write novels which dissect their inner emotions, such wails come from women. So women learn to think of their husbands as satisfied, phlegmatic, or at the best, stoical.

A man, discussing the other day "The Light That Failed," said that he considered unnatural the scene where the hero goes blind. "A man does not show his heart to a friend at such a crisis," he said. "My grandfather, when he learned that the rest of his life was to be lived in darkness, went to his room and stayed there for a day. From that time until he died he never mentioned his affliction. Men bleed inwardly. They do not show their wounds to the world."

Think of that, you women, who complain and who believe that men have no feeling. You consider your hysterics a sign of extreme sensibility, but the set of a man's lips or the grip of his clenched fists may mean more of real suffering than you can understand.

Men rarely whine. They may be irritable, tyrannical, aggressive, but they keep silent on the subject of domestic troubles and financial woes, with the result that they are not credited with depth of feeling.

It is the exceptional woman who does not confide her troubles to some one; it is the exceptional man who tells them. "Life is unequal," cries the wife who is unhappy. "I suffer because I am weak, and women have no rights." Such a woman has not the intuitions which would tell her that her husband suffers also. She sees only the exterior, and judges him by herself.

We hear much of women's wrongs, but men could tell a tale of injustice which might open the eyes of their accusers. Many a story of married unhappiness might be made to end happily if the wife could only understand that her husband's reticence is not a sign of lack of feeling. To get underneath the outer shell of a man's hardness is often to find something very wonderful. The woman who sets herself to learn what is in her husband's heart may find there treasures undreamed of. Love is not a thing of surface demonstrations. Yet many women believe it so, and thus silent, steadfast men are misunderstood. There is something pathetic about the man who, loving and suffering, is inarticulate. He cannot voice what he feels, and his wife, who em-

SEND FLOWERS TO THE LIVING

Send flowers to your loved ones while they live,
Sweet flowers to your loved ones living, oft oh give;
O'er loved ones living let their odors shed,
Keep them not back till life and thought have fled.

Pluck for your loved ones living, Rose-in-Bloom,
Send lilies chaste yet laden with perfume,
For loved ones living strip sweet violets' bed,
'Tis vain to lay them on your loved ones dead.

Strew them along the hard pathway of life;
Their silent, speaking sweetness stilling strife.
The footpath of the living with them pave;
Wait not to spread them on some dear one's grave.

When rests for aye the loved one's aching head,
Come not to wish some unkind word unsaid;
To wash with tears your loved one's silent tomb
And light its darkness with bright flowers' bloom.

Give while with warm blood throbs the human heart;
Send them to soothe the hasty, hard words' smart;
Deck not with them your lost one's lowly bed;
It is too hapless late when they are dead.
—GEORGE WILSON.

THE MOTHER AND THE GIRL

Family skeletons cannot be hidden from a governess. She is not merely in the home, but of it. Provided that she is blessed with the maternal instinct and a sympathetic nature, she is often closer to the children of the household than are the parents. She sees parents as they really are, through the eyes of their children. After twenty years' experience as a governess, commanding a good salary and living among both the moderately rich and the inordinately rich I can honestly say that money and ambition are building strange barriers between American parents and American children. Blood may be thicker than water, but it cannot defy the laws of propinquity and temperament, environment and personal influence. In thousands of American homes to-day children are not what their parents make them, but what their teachers, governesses—yes, and servants make them.

In certain fashionable homes the father is more like a visitor than a member of the family circle. His wife belongs not to her children, but to the world. If she is to hold her own in the social game, she must be always in it. When her children are wakening to their nursery and school life she is just returning from a dance or ball. When her children are preparing for bed she is absorbed in dressing for dinner, the play or the cotillion. Where the family wealth is not so great the mother must work all the harder to achieve social success. She rises early and retires late, but she has even less time to devote to her children. When they come home at noon she has gone to a bridge whist luncheon. After school closes for the day they return to a motherless home, for she is at a club meeting or a tea or a musicale.

Every once in a while a dreadful tragedy overtakes such an unmothered family, a tragedy so appalling that there is no hushing it up. Police department and press are frantically appealed to. And when the details of the affair are unearthed, the public is very apt, especially after reading touching accounts of the mother's grief, to exclaim, "What an ungrateful child. Such a loving parent and such a charming home."

The American parent is the most generous in the world with everything except with [illegible] to build up character in children [illegible] personal influence. An American [illegible] sacrifice her own [illegible] and good time that her daughters may have them. She will arrange functions that will advance her daughter's social interests. She will risk health and eyesight to supply her daughter the handmade raiment which is now supposed to be the hallmark of the truly smart young woman. But she is too absorbed in all this to really get close to her daughter's real life interests, to actually know the real girl. When I hear the world say of a girl: "What an ungrateful daughter," I catch myself asking what had the girl to be grateful for, hand embroidered lingerie or mother's love? We talk about the dangers which surround the working girl, starving for food and suffering for the want of warm clothing. What of the girl whose heart is starving in the midst of material luxury?

MR. JEPSON'S GLIDE

A Short Story

BY JOHN CHARLETON

"You will have to give up some of those fool ideas of yours if you expect to marry me," said the Widow Long, emphatically, when her fiance limped up to the door with a stout cane held in each hand. "I heard all about that accident of yours and I'm not going to risk my future peace of mind by having you go against the scripture and go cavorting around into space."

As she spoke the pretty widow skilfully assisted aBrtholomew Jepson into her sitting room, carried his hat and overcoat into the next room, propped his wounded foot upon a comfortable footrest and poured out a tumberful of sweet cider. She did it all so quietly and deftly that it seemed like one continuous action instead of a variety of small ones.

"What is the matter, Libbie?" he asked, uneasily.

"Matter with what?" she demanded, shortly.

"With you? You look—er—out of sorts."

Libbie Long looked at him scornfully. "You heard what I said when you came in, Bartholomew Jepson, and you have the impudence to ask me what is the matter."

"I ain't been a bachelor for so many years as I have to be dictated to now," he said.

"What?" demanded the pretty widow, sitting up very straight.

"I was thinking to myself," apologized aBrtholomew, aullenly.

"If that's the kind of thoughts you harbour, you better——" Mrs. Long paused significantly.

"I better?" asked Jepson, excitedly.

"Yes, you better," flared Libbie. "When I engaged myself to marry you I thought you were a sensible man, but I'd never seen you anywhere except in that bookatore of yours. I thought to myself that a man who keeps a bookatore couldn't help but be steady and quiet—and if anyone had told me that you'd be the first one in Kedar to try to fly through the air I would have laughed in his face."

"The way he spoke when I told him to chose between me and the gliding machine was as much as to say there was plenty of women in the world, but only one gliding machine. Perhaps after he breaks a few more arms and legs he'll come to his senses," she ended, plaintively, for she was sorry for herself. So their engagement was suspended, so to speak, for the widow did not return the amethyst ring Bartholomew had placed upon her finger. "Let him come after it," she murmured to herself every time she looked at it, and that was very often, for she continued to wear it on her engagement finger. Bartholomew Jepson's house was situated on what was known as the Upper Bay road and Libbie Long's was on the Lower Bay road. Bartholomew's was built on a sort of plateau that shelved off perhaps fifty feet into Libbie Long's backyard. In front of the Jepson house there ran the Upper Bay road, and the view of harbour and surrounding hillsides was beautiful.

Libbie's house was very old and weather-beaten, with wide chimneys and a mossy roof. After they were married Bartholomew and his bride had planned to sell the widow's old home and live in the Jepson house. Several weeks passed away and the amateur glider recovered the use of his ankle and once more they told stories of how "Batty" Jepson was practicing with his gliding machine. Those who watched said that they had seen him make several successful glides from the ridgepole of his barn to the back door yard of his house. Some festivity in the village diverted all attention from Mr. Jepson's efforts on the most brilliant moonlight night of the autumn. He had planned a daring glide. He was going to start from the roof of his house and glide gently and swiftly through the air to the lower roads. There was a broad space between the locust trees near Libbie Long's house that would admit of his free passage between them. "I don't see anything funny in it," said Jepson, rather sourly. "That's the way in Kedar—they despise the sciences."

"Science, indeed. I don't see much science about carrying a gliding machine to the roof of a house and trying to slide off to the ground without hurting yourself. You have broken three legs and a collarbone so far, besides spraining your ankle yesterday."

"I can't give up the gliding machine," said Bartholomew with unexpected spirit in one usually so meek; and during an ominous silence he hobbled across the room, retrieved his hat and overcoat, managed to get into one and balance the other on his head.

"I wish you good day, Libbie," he said, quietly, and went away.

"I don't suppose you will ever come back," mused Libbie.

Bartholomew Jepson's glide was successful in more ways than one. He left the roof of his house, headed straight between the two tall trees, when a hat flew into his face; he veered suddenly and then, losing control of himself, plunged solidly onward, crashing through the widow's frail roof, leaving a tearing hole in the shingles and landing plumply on a pile of feather beds in the attic.

When the frightened widow came into the attic, candle in hand, she stared at aBrtholomew Jepson's pale face, with consternation mingled with joy in her own.

"You see—I came—back, Libbie," smiled Bartholomew, for he had missed Libbie more than he dared acknowledge.

"Oh, you have hurt yourself again—where is it now?" bewailed Libbie Long, absently permitting the glider to kiss her plump cheek.

"I expect—it's my heart this time," grinned Bartholomew with recovered spirits as he emerged from his feathery nest.

HAS ATTAINED TO AGE OF 105

Alexander Renau, of Halleybury, was Born During the Reign of King George III.

Erect, hale and hearty, Alexander Renau, of Halleybury, is a living advertisement of the virtues that exist in the non-observance of the maxims of our grandfathers. He celebrates his 106th birthday in December, and has made a constant use of tobacco, both smoking and chewing it since he was 11 years old. He also was a moderate drinker of alcoholic beverages until within seven years or so ago when he was seized with the idea that as he had come to live in close proximity to places where liquor could be obtained with ease, he had better cut it out as a too great facility for obtaining beverages might lead over-indulge in them. Alexander was born in St. Paul, Quebec, Dec. 10, 1805, when Napoleon was the dread and when George the third was on the throne of the only country in Europe that was able to offer any serious opposition to Napoleon's conquering march.

From his earliest youth, Alexander Renau was habituated to a life of rough work and as he himself states, was almost born with an axe in his hand. Lumbering was the one industry apart from trapping and the small amount of elementary farming that was pursued in those remote days in Quebec. Lumbering and farming have been the chief occupations of his life, and yet the feel of an axe is pleasant to his hands and his great age does not prevent him from wishing to be out again at the timber. MONEY IN MANNERS

The Remarkable Cash and Success Value of "Personality."

Brains count for a good deal in this world, but appearance, bearing, and voice count for more. A good personality can double your income. A bad one can halve it.

I am myself a fairly intelligent man, says a writer in Answers, though I candidly admit that, if I had to rely upon my brains alone, I should never have been able to keep up my 500-a-year house and three servants. My intelligence told me, while I was still at school, that it needed something additional to bolster it up, and by keeping my eyes well open, I soon found out what that particular something was.

In a word, it was manner—or personality, which is the same thing. For a whole year, I devoted myself mainly to steadying and deepening my voice, improving my outward appearance, and learning to look people straight in the face. They would do well, in many cases, to copy my methods, however, for I count that year as the most important in my life.

I shall never forget my instantaneous success. My first job, as a traveller, brought me up against a peppery gentleman whose very face was enough to keep travellers out of his shop. The goods I was showing, moreover, were really quite poor, and I could think of very few arguments in their favour. But I went into that shop with such a confident air, and addressed its owner in such a deep and pleasant voice, that I had his order neatly and clearly transcribed in my book within three minutes.

I can't say who was the more surprised on thinking the matter over afterwards—he or I!

One man, who confessed to me that he was very familiar with the dunce's cap when a scholar, said that he owed his entire success to the way he could ward off the single word "No."

"I make it difficult for those I am with to say 'No,'" he told me. "That is my one burning object. They realise that I don't expect them to say 'No,' and that they'll have to go into reasons if they do. In personal interviews, commissions and favours go thickest to those whom it is most unpleasant to refuse. Make it unpleasant and exceedingly difficult to refuse you—and the game's yours."

In order to do all these things, it is necessary to make the most of your appearance. Not only does this create a good impression at the outset, but it actually lends confidence to your subsequent voice and manner. Many people, in various branches of life, work best when they are best clad, while in slovenly attire their brains move slowly and sluggishly. This is a matter, indeed, that is often neglected.

The general effect of personality is seen in the simple daily occurrences around us. The man with "the firm manner" is served respectfully by the paper-boy, who has just cheeked a rude, unruly customer. He is also the first to be served in the crowded restaurant he visits, or in the shop. His orders are carried out as though they were favours, while in street rows or drawing-room disputes the majority blindly take his side, as though he were a leader. He gets the best, and the most of everything.

THE HEBERT MARRIAGE CASE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, QUE., DEC. 6—There was another development in the Hebert marriage annulment case yesterday, when Mrs. Hebert asked that the judgment nullifying the marriage be declared null and void. It is understood that it is a fore-runner of an action to definitely test in the courts the right of ecclesiastical canons to declare the marriage null.

SKIN TROUBLES GROW WORSE

Eczema, Psoriasis, and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. That is what causes that awful itch, and what seemed a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years and years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble, but have never—never seen such remarkable cures as those from D.D.D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D.D.D. or why not drop a line to the D.D.D Laboratories, Dept. P. E., 49 Colborne St., Toronto.

CAVENDISH ELECTORS ARE BADLY TREATED

Conservatives Have Moved Polling Booth From Ford's School House to David Higgins' House, a Distance of Five Miles---People Have to Drive Nearly Ten Miles to Vote and Majority of Those Affected Are Liberals---Mr. Hall's Meetings in North.

Mr. R. R. Hall held a very successful meeting yesterday afternoon at three o'clock at Ford's school house, Cavendish.

The chairman, Mr. Peacock, of Silver Lake, drew attention to the most unfair way in which Mr. E. A. Peck, the Conservative candidate, is treating the electors of the Township of Cavendish. He has moved the polling booth from the most central point at Ford's school house, to the house of David Higgins, over five miles away, thereby necessitating the majority of the people of Cavendish to drive nearly ten miles in order to cast their votes. They believe that Mr. Peck did this deliberately on account of the fact that the electors that are the most inconvenienced are Liberals, but nevertheless they would go out and record their vote just the same.

Mr. Hall said that the inconvenience that Mr. Peck had subjected the electors of Cavendish to, was also on a par with his attitude with those living on the Buckhorn road. A large number of the electors on the Buckhorn road are forced to drive from 10 to 15 miles to record their vote at Buckhorn. It is scarcely creditable to any impartial, fair-minded man, that Mr. Peck would knowingly do this. It just happens, however, that the electors who are the most inconvenienced, are Liberals, and hence it is necessary to punish them.

Mr. Hall said that when the matter was placed before the electors of the City of Peterborough, that Mr. Peck would lose more than he gains d by it, which shows that Mr. Peck feels that the ground is slipping from under him and that he is losing his support when he is forced to resort to such unfair methods.

"I would sooner believe," said Mr. Hall, "that Mr. Peck had been badly advised, than believe that he would do anything so unfair." A man cannot shelter himself behind bad advisers. He should only accept good advice.

Mr. Hall the same evening held a very successful meeting at Swamp Lake school house, Galway. The school house was crowded to the door. A large number attending the meeting had to stand up.

Mr. Charles Coben, Reeve of Galway, occupied the chair. He spoke of the splendid services that Mr. Hall had rendered during the time he represented this constituency at Ottawa, and referred to the large number of improvements that had been made upon his representations. He predicted that Mr. Hall would have a large majority from Galway and Cavendish. He referred to the insufficient amount of colonization road money that had been spent in the Township of Galway. During this last seven years, not one foot of new road had been built and even the roads that were built are being allowed to become badly in need of repairs.

It is impossible, declared Mr. Coben for a municipality like the Township of Galway, which is sparsely settled, to keep these roads in good repair without government aid. The great trouble with Mr. Bradburn, ex-M.P.P., was that he made no effective representations to the government. He was too easy going. What the electors of Galway required was an active, energetic man like Mr. Hall, who would see that the representations are made to the government. While Mr. Anderson, ex-M.P.P. represented East Peterborough, and was an out and out opponent of the Whitney government, concluded Mr. Coben, he got more money spent upon colonization roads than did Mr. Bradburn, who was a supporter of the government.

Mr. Hall spoke at length upon the issues of the day and was warmly applauded.

Conservative Cold Comfort For Workingmen Re Compensation

It is apparent that the Peck-Morine mass meeting held in the opera house last night, was for the specific, if not announced, object of discrediting in advance Hon. Mackenzie King who speaks to-morrow night in the opera house in the interests of the candidature of Mr. Hall, and in the interests of labour and the workingman. Mr. Morine's reference to the Compensation Act, involved a fierce attack on Mr. King and a strong defence of Premier Whitney's hostile attitude towards legislation in the interests of the working man.

Mr. Morine said that the law would be changed—sometime in the sweet by and bye—when the report of the Special Commissioner appointed nearly two years ago, had been received. As the spokesman of the Whitney Government, Mr. Morine told the working men, that they didn't know what they wanted; that they were going against their own interests in demanding a workable Compensation Act. His whole argument and the policy of the Whitney Government, were simmered down to the advice that if the working man wished to get compensation for injuries received in the course of his employment, he could go to an accident insurance company and get a policy of insurance for $5.00, and in case of accident fight it out on his hook with the insurance company. The working man did not need a compensation law; he must be a law unto himself, and look out for himself, thus relieving the employer altogether, though his carelessness and the dangerous condition of his machinery caused the accident. That is a fair summary of the cold comfort that the spokesman of the Whitney Government handed out to the working men last night. They ask for bread and the Whitney Government hands them a stone.

Every working man who heard Mr. Morine last night owes it to himself to hear Hon. Mackenzie King in the Opera House to-morrow night.

WILL PRESS HOME RULE FOR IRELAND

Premier Asquith Announces in House of Commons To-day That Government Will Use All the Constitutional Means at Its Disposal to Pass the Measure.

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 6.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Premier Asquith announced that the Government would use all constitutional means at its disposal to pass the Home Rule bill for Ireland during the lifetime of the present Parliament. He made this declaration following a questioning by William O'Brien of Cork City, who expressed anxiety at the news that the House of Lords intended to throw out the Home Rule Bill here. Asquith's announcement means that he intends to force the bill through three consecutive sessions, if necessary, despite the opposition of the peers.

SON OF YORK SCORES WHITNEY'S THREE-FIFTHS CLAUSE SCHEME

To the Editor of the Examiner,—

Speaking at Guelph on November 29th, in defence of the three-fifths clause, Premier Whitney said: "It is better to have a minority feel they are really beaten than to have one side with a majority of only 8 or 10, with the result that the community sits in two sections on opposite sides of the road glaring at each other."

So far so good. But is it not equally, and even more probable, that one side would glare across the road savagely at the other, if they thought they had been deprived of local option by that most provoking technicality, the three-fifths clause? Is it at all probable that sweet content would reign in the minds of those who felt that they had won a real victory, whose results were entirely negative, owing to the operation of this partizan wedge—the three-fifths clause? For a partizan wedge it surely is, acting as it has done in almost every case to the detriment of the temperance cause and to the marked advantage of the liquor interests. If a simple majority sufficed in any other case why should it not suffice when a plebiscite is taken upon the question of local option? The men who control the liquor business are in practically every case good citizens, broad-minded, intelligent voters, nevertheless that they have rights above the rest of the electorate is ridiculous to assume, as this intrusive enactment assuredly does. A simple majority where local option was voted upon, has so far sufficed in every State in the Union, in every Province of Canada till that fateful session of 1906. Since that year there have been so many protests from both Liberals and Conservatives in all parts of the Province against this retrogressive step, that they have almost amounted to a demand for a plebiscite upon this important question.

Sir James Whitney's attitude towards this issue has been generously assumed by some of his opponents to be of that misguided and narrow-minded, philanthropist. The essence of philanthropy, however, has always been disinterestedness, and it is difficult to see how a man who has solicited the patronage of the liquor interests so boldly with the gift of a three-fifths clause can be dubbed a philanthropist.

Local option contests under this obnoxious measure have left more neighbours "glaring at each other" than did any election under the old "simple majority" rule. And they will continue to glare at one another as long as this handicap remains on the books.

This is one of the gravest, indeed, in some ways, the greatest question facing the electorate. Will any thoughtful, right-thinking man support a government that supports such an affront to the temperance sentiment in the Province; such a manifest injustice to so many municipalities which have suffered because of this hampering policy? Surely not; it is not a question of party politics but something that should be grappled with and overthrown by all conscientious citizens, whatever their political creed.

Yours truly,

Dec. 5, 1911. YORK.

A PROFITABLE SUGGESTION

"Ready-To-Wear" has the following profitable suggestion.

Organization and co-operation are good for the garment manufacturer. They are also good for the retailer.

A Joint Garment Opening.

Here is a practical way in which local merchants may co-operate with great advantage to each one. Arrange to hold a joint spring opening of ready-to-wear garments. Get together in plenty of time before the time for such an event and discuss plans for bringing the attention of the women of your town and surrounding country in a forcible and striking way to the fact that the merchants in that town are going to present for their inspection a display of garments which it will be well worth their while to see.

Hold the opening on a given day, or days, and let every store in the town carrying ready-to-wear co-operate by advertising and by store display to make a profound impression on the women of the community. Convince them that in your town she can get anything she wants, and that it is not necessary for her to send away to Eaton's or some other city store for any garment she wants.

Sink petty jealousies and differences and combine for the benefit of the other merchants in your town. Everyone will be better for such co-operation.

Before the time comes this paper will have some definite plans to suggest by means of which merchants can get the active support of the newspapers in carrying out the idea of a joint Garment Opening. It is not too early, though, to begin to think about and discuss with the other merchants in your town, the idea suggested here.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

Photograph of Six Hundred Children Will be Feature of Saturday's Big Holiday Number of Examiner

WORK OF ROY STUDIO

The Examiner's Christmas number will be published on Saturday of this week, Dec. 9th, and promises to be the best number of its kind ever issued by this paper. The edition will consist of six sections, forty-four pages in all, and in addition to being notable for its artistic illustrations and its special Christmas matter, will be a veritable shopper's guide, as there will be special Christmas advertising of a helpful nature. Probably the outstanding feature of the edition will be the full page reproduction of the Roy Studio's group of children entitled "The Coming Generation," an unique and artistic photograph that will be well worthy of being preserved. There are portraits of nearly 600 children—to be exact, 587—in the group, and the picture is a triumph indeed for the Roy Studio. The faces stand out with remarkable clearness and every child in the group can be identified without the least difficulty. The arrangement is novel and attractive—the whole effect being so striking that words cannot express the effect. The picture must be seen in order that its merits may be judged. Every photograph reproduced in the group has been taken by the Roy Studio between the first of the present year and Nov. 15th.—a statement that gives some idea of the immense volume of business done by this well known studio. There are laughing babies, smiling babies, babies with an apparent grave outlook on life, merry babies, demure babies, babies of all kinds and all garbs—in fact, Young Peterborough true to life. The Examiner has given its readers no special feature of which it has reason to feel so proud as this group, which will be published in sturday's Christmas number. Everyone in Peterborough should secure a copy if only for the purpose of securing this remarkable demonstratin of the photographic art.

Saturday's number—"The Star of Bethlehem" in particular, Christmas poetry, Christmas recipes, Christmas games and other similar features.

A Boost For Calgary

Special to The Examiner:

Montreal, Que., Dec. 5.—In Calgary, where the Canadian Pacific Railway is to erect its new Western machine and car shops, surveyors have been at work for some time laying out the site and placing the stakes for the excavation work. According to agreement between the company and the city, work is to be started not later than one month after the ratification of the agreement. No information has been given out as yet, with regard to the size of the new shops, but it is expected that there will be about two thousand men employed. Reckoning on the average of five to the family, this means that Calgary's population will be increased by nearly ten thousand as a result of the locating of the Canadian Pacific Rilway's ew shops in that city. It is stated that the new establishment will be modelled closely after the Agua shops in Montreal.

LAST NIGHT'S MEETING.

The mass meeting held in the Opera House last night in the interests of Mr. Peck's candidature, was not unduly massive, in the matter of either attendance, or the arguments advanced, or the policy propounded. Mr. Peck and Mr. Morine, K.C., the plausible advocate of the Whitney government, were about equally indefinite and promising on the matters dealt with. Mr. Morine took the working men to his heart and made them—in words — very noble creatures; but they must not venture to think for themselves. They did not know what they wanted in the matter of compensation. They had better trust to the Whitney government to look after the compensation law, some time within the next six or seven years. Anyway, the workingmen really do not want a compensation law; it would only land them in more trouble; if they wanted any protection, they must provide it themselves—at their own expense—they could get an accident insurance policy for $5. That was all they needed. Mr. Morine dealt with the three-fifths clause, and inferentially condemned Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, for making its abolition a positive plank in his platform. According to Mr. Morine, the three-fifths handicap was the noblest thing ever devised in the interests of temperance or of local prohibition; it put strong public sentiment behind it and helped enforcement of the law—something of help being evidently needed under the loose-end license law administration of the Whitney government.

Here we have a strong example of what true temperance people regard as the curse and bane of the temperance movement, of men that are politicians first and temperance men when no party gain is at stake.

Mr. Morine is president of the Dominion Alliance, the most influential and important of the temperance forces of the Dominion. Mr. Morine, as president, has doubtless been a member of Alliance deputations, that have waited on Premier Whitney to demand the abolition of the three-fifths clause, only to be received with blank denial. On Saturday last, Mr. Morine, as president of the Alliance, presided at a meeting which unanimously decided to pledge their support only, to candidates of advanced temperance views. Only three days later, we have the president of the Alliance, speaking with burning eloquence, in favour of retaining the most potent clog to temperance progress that an enemy of it could devise; and one which the body he heads wants abolished as an aid to the banishment of the bar. The Alliance pledges candidates to support temperance measures, but its president last night did not pledge Mr. Peck. Mr. Peck occupies a more consistent and enviable position than the president; he doesn't pretend to be a friend of temperance and does not conceal that his associations naturally ally him with the interests of the traffic. Temperance men know where to find him. A fair, outspoken foe is preferable any time to a double tongued friend—who talks temperance in Toronto on Saturday, and on Tuesday, in Peterboorugh, behind a boast that he "hasn't a red nose," advocates as a politician, what temperance men regard as hostile to the welfare of the cause—a stumbling block and stone of offence.

The temperance people have the matter in their own hands. If they vote as they pray; if they think more of temperance than of party success, they know how they must vote.

ONE GREAT WRONG.

The chairman at the Conservative meeting last night defied anybody to place "any finger" upon any wrong done by the Whitney Government. Standards of right and wrong vary; but from a provincial point of view, no greater wrong has ever been done the Province of Ontario than Sir James Whitney's big and specific breach of a specific promise, as represented by the gigantic land grant to the Canadian Northern Railway.

Premier Whitney took office upon the distinct pledge that he would make no land grants to railways. Yet, at the first opportunity, at the first time of asking, Sir James Whitney gave a grant of two million acres of the choicest available lands of the province to a railway—the Canadian Northern. This land is in the clay belt of northern Ontario, which consists of about sixteen million acres, and it means that one-eighth of this great belt has been placed in the hands of a railway corporation and effectively blocked from settlement, at the will of the railway.

The reader can hardly realize the enormity of this gift; this wrongful alienation of the lands of the people to the purposes of private speculation. The land is to be selected by the railway itself, and it will not naturally take the worst land. It is to be taken in alternative blocks on each side of the railway that is to run from Port Arthur to Sellwood Junction. The land is to be given (selected by the Company) in alternate township blocks, each township block to be nine miles square, and contain each over 50,000 acres. The grant will amount to between 38 and 40 townships. Just think of it; thirty-eight or forty townships would be equal to one-eighth of the total area of the clay belt and equal in area to three or four counties in the Midland district.

The worst feature of this politically indefensible land grant is that it is given on terms that will permit the railway to hold the land till it is made valuable by the toil of settlers, in the surrounding townships. This will give the grant an immense money value. If it is held till the land gains a value of five dollars an acre, it will be equivalent to a cash gift of five million dollars.

This, however, is not the only bad feature. Anybody can see how the holding idle of alternate township blocks will retard settlement. Settlers will not want to occupy townships that will be separated from other occupied townships by unbroken forest lands, without roads, or other improvements.

This monstrous grant is, apparently, the outcome of Sir James Whitney's hostile attitude towards New Ontario. When the Ross Government opened it up and disclosed, by exploration, its richness, Sir James sneered at it as "the land of the stunted poplar." He got the idea in his head that it was worthless, and has, apparently, kept it there. He is, therefore, consistent—even if he had to break a solemn promise to show it—in giving to a railway corporation two million acres of "worthless" land that will, however, permit the railway to clean up five to ten million dollars, cash, according to the value the settlement work of others will give it. The Tory Toronto Telegram says Sir James Whitney had slept six years over the development of New Ontario. This is a melancholy fact, and his gift to the Railway is another evidence not only of his indifference to building up, and developing the resources of, the province, but of his indifference to his pledged word, of his friendly attitude towards corporations, and his thereby necessarily hostile attitude towards the people, and the people's interests.

Everybody knows how the settlement of New Ontario will stimulate and help manufacturing and commercial interests in older Ontario, the great manufacturing province of Canada; how every settler helped to become a consumer in New Ontario will create work for our working men in our great manufacturing industries. Yet, Sir James takes the monstrous view that the Province should not take any trouble to settle New Ontario, because it will not provide any provincial revenue. This is an attitude that a second's reflection shows to be retrogressive and unworthy of the greatest province of the Dominion.

SENTENCE WAS SUSPENDED

Who Is Mackenzie King? This Is The Answer

Go and hear the Hon. Mackenzie King in the Opera House to-morrow night.

He is the workingman's friend, the people's friend. That is why R. R. Hall brought him here to speak.

The people's rights, the workingman's rights, are more than a cause with him. They are an inheritance.

Mackenzie King's full name is William Lyon Mackenzie King. The William Lyon Mackenzie part of it indicates that he is the grandson of the great patriot of 1837 whose sufferings inaugurated most of the civil liberty we now enjoy.

William Lyon Mackenzie was a workingman—one of those early editors who, at a pinch, set type, ran the press and distributed the newspapers.

For the people's rights he endured scorn, calumny, persecution, business loss, the dangers of battle, exile and poverty.

William Lyon Mackenzie lived to return to Canada and take an acknowledged place as the defender of liberty.

Mackenzie King is his grandson. Like Grandfather—like Grandson.

Mackenzie King has been a student of popular rights ever since his college days. He has announced that he will continue studying all his life. He is one of the few public men who believe in knowing their subject at first hand and from the ground up.

He has brought the resources of a fertile mind to bear upon the cause of Labour.

It was he who conducted the investigation and brought in the report which led the Laurier Government to appoint a fair wages official and abolsih the sweating in all clothing contracts for the Militia and other uniformed Government services.

He was, under the Laurier Government, successively editor of the Labour Gazette, Deputy Minister of Labour, and Minister of Labour. His work in these departments is well known.

He settled many strikes and lockouts, presided over many arbitrations and as chief dispenser of the Conciliation Act, saved the workingmen of this country much misery, idleness and loss of wages.

Mackenzie King was the moving impulse behind every good act of the Labour Department. One of his last official acts was to introduce a bill to succor the victims of the white phosporus industry. He is, by the way, a recognized authority on industrial diseases.

It has been Mackenzie King's duty as well as his inclination to be a friend of the workingman.

It has been objected to him that he is young. That is a fault that every year overcomes. He has an old head on young shoulders, fresh, youthful ideals and enthusiasm engrafted on a trained political instinct.

He is in thorough sympathy with R. R. Hall's stand on the Workman's Compensation Act and the Factory Inspection Act. That is the reason why he speaks in Peterborough.

Go and hear him at the Opera House. He looks like a boy, and talks like an elder statesman.

And vote for R. R. Hall, who says "Amen" to all that Mackenzie King utters in the cause of Labour.

"From Trapper To Wearer" Tells Story Of Barrie's Great Fur Offerings

"If you want to give her a present that will be really appreciated, make it furs!" is the advice of the-lady-who-always-knows to an inquiry as to Christmas gifts; and the more one considers the suggestion, the more one is convinced of its correctness. What could be more appropriate for a Christmas gift in this rigorous climate of ours than a handsome set of furs? And when you think of furs, you think of Barrie's Limited, recognized headquarters for some of the finest furs to be purchased in the Dominion. The big establishment, augmented as it is by the large Regina branch established some time ago, is in a better position than ever now to supply its numerous customers. With a business conducted on such a large scale it is an inevitable result that prices are moderate—to a degree that is remarkable when one considers the quality of the goods offered for sale.

Barrie's handle the furs from the trapper to wearer, manufacturing all their own goods in their extensive plant, and there need be no hesitation as to the workmanship, which is of the very best. When a person buys furs he buys them to last, and that is why Barrie's furs are in demand. They have the quality of material, the excellence of workmanship, the stylishness of cut and design that are the very acme of fur manufacturing. Their local store is crowded with a magnificent showing of fur coats and caps, muffs, stoles, and scarfs in every variety of fur—Hudson Bay sable, Alaska sable, mink, opposum, marten Seal, Persian lamb—a wonderful display from which the most fastidious should have no difficulty in making a selection. While, of course, the rarer furs are necessarily high-priced there is an immense range of lower-priced goods; so that almost anyone's pocketbook can be accommodated—so extensive is the stock.

Barrie, Limited, gentleman's furnishings department is of the same high standard as the fur section. Special preparations have been made in this department, which is stocked with a splendid line of Christmas goods. Dainty boxes will be given each purchaser—a feature that will meet with popular approval.

The Bilingual Schools Issue Is Not A Religious Question

There is a good deal of loose talk on the streets and in the press as to the danger of raising a sectarian feud by a discussion of the bilingual school issue. People who talk in that way are entirely ignorant of the actual situation. The most conspicuous opponent of bilingual schools in Ontario is Bishop Fallon, a Roman Catholic prelate. The Attorney-General, Mr. Foy, who is charged by the French-Canadian Educational Association with a "cruel, arbitrary, and sweeping denial of the rights of the French-speaking population of Ontario," is also a Roman Catholic. It is true that the Orange Order has ranged itself against the bilingual schools, but that can hardly be said to give a sectarian cast to the agitation when the Orangemen find themselves in the company of a Roman Catholic Bishop and practically the entire Irish Catholic population of Ontario.

Nothing is to be gained by concealment of the essential facts. On a large scale the battle has been renewed between the French Catholic and the Irish Catholic people of Ontario. The French Catholics sincerely believe that in Canada Catholicism and the French language strengthen each other. Their westward and northward trek into Ontario has been undertaken in the common cause of race and religion. In the communities they overrun many Irish Catholic children are forced to attend schools in which English, their mother tongue, as well as that of Protestants, is so imperfectly taught that their children are greatly handicapped in the battle of life.

As the first schools to fall under bilingualism in the communities penetrated by the French are usually separate schools, the Irish Catholics have to bear the brunt of the opposition. That they should seek to strengthen their forces by securing the co-operation of the English-speaking population, whose children are compelled to put up with the inefficient English education of the public bilingual schools, is scarcely to be wondered at. The linguistic difficulty has increased very greatly in recent years because of the absolute inefficiency of Dr. Pyne, the Minister of Education, who still sleeps at his post despite the vigorous denunciation of the bilingual schools by Bishop Fallon.

It should be apprehended clearly by every elector that the bilingual issue is not a religious one. Nor is it racial in the sense of involving hostile action on the part of the overwhelming English-speaking majority against the language of the French-speaking minority, so long as that language is not given a place in the public school system of Ontario that it never was meant to have. There is no hostility to our French-speaking fellow-Canadians involved in requiring that in this English-speaking Province the language of instruction in the schools shall be English, and that every child sent out from the schools of Ontario shall have, as Mr. Rowell puts it, "a thorough English education."

Miss Hislop is the holder of a Second Class Professional certificate and is highly recommended.

Respectfully submitted.
W. H. HILL.
Chairman.

Mr. Fair drew the attention of the Board to the disgraceful condition of affairs at the Queen Alexandra school. Several panes of glass had been riddled with stones, and serious damage had been done to the lavatories. The attention of the Chief of Police had been directed to the matter, but he had been unable to apprehend the guilty party or parties.

Mr. Hill thought that the janitof should exercise a closer supervision of the school property during school hours.

It was moved by Mr. Fair, seconded by Dr. Morrison that notices be placed in the schoolss offering a reward of $25 for the apprehension and conviction of the party or parties damaging school property.—Carried.

The teasurer was authorized to issue a cheque to Miss Jean Armstrong for the amount of fees paid by her to the Principal of the Collegiate Institute, her father being a ratepayer in this city.

The Board adjourned on motion of Dr. Morrison, to the call of the chairman for a special meeting at a later date, when the school sites in the East and West Wards will be discussed. The meeting will be open to the citizens, who will be free to express their views on the matter. Those present were Dr. Burnham, Mr. R. Fair, Col. Miller, Dr. Morrison and Mr. W. H. Hill.

CROSS, SICK, FEVERISH CHILDREN NEED GENTLE BUT EFFECTIVE CASCARETS AT ONCE

Most of the ills of childhood are caused by a sour, disordered stomach, sluggish liver and constipated bowels. They catch cold easily, become cross, listless, irritable, feverish, restless, tongue coated, don't eat or sleep well and need a gentle, though thorough, physic—but don't try to force a nauseating dose of oil into the little one's aready sick stomach — it is cruel, needless and old-fashioned.

Any child will gladly take Cascarets which act gently—never gripe or produce the slightest uneasiness—though cleanses the little one's system, sweetens the stomach and puts the liver and bowels in a pure, healthy condition.

Full directions for children and grown-ups in each package.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this gentle, thorough laxative which costs only 10 cents per box.

SPLENDID SHOWING OF FOOTWEAR AT KYLIE'S

Well Stocked Hunter Street Establishment Has Complete Array of Output of the Best Makers---Latest Styles, Ample Variety and Moderate Prices Characterize the Store.

The winter is here and with it the snow and ice. For this reason it is necessary to be well shod. How can a man expect to keep his feet warm and comfortable if he has bad shoes. This trouble would be elimfnated, as also would that of ill-fitting footwear, were an occasional visit paid to Mr. J. Klie of Hunter street. Those who already deal at this establishment never experience these troubles.

Looking at the neatly trimmed window of this old established firm, filled with all the latest styles of boots and shoes, the prospective purchaser will find ample variety and will not fail to find something to supply his wants in the way of footwear.

Mr. Kylie has a new line of footwear of exceptionally high merit in the Helming, McKenzie shoes. They are manufactured in Cincinatti, and the manufacturers are one of the most prominent firms, and among the best makers in the United States. These may be obtained in all styles and sizes. Numerous other well known shoes are to be obtained at this establishment. A few of them are here given:

Ladies—The Creighton shoe, manufactured in Boston; the Rideau, the Frank W. Slater and the Cleo shoe, which are among the very best makes in Canada. Getty and Scott shoes, for ladies and children, are also worthy of mention.

Men's — Walker and Whitman, Brompton, Mass, The Monarch, the Rideau, the Frank W. Slater, and the Hartt shoe, which, with shoes manufactured by Ames, Holden, McCready are of the very foremost of Canadian footwear.

All these productions are of the very first quality. In heavy foot wear, Mr. Kylie has over a dozen varieties. With regard to rubbers, Mr. Kylie has a large number which will fit any style of boots, either in ladies or gentlemen's.

If you are wanting footwear, and do not know just what to ask for, go to Mr. Kylie. He will accommodate you.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

POLACKS AND ITALIANS IN ROW

(Lindsay Warder.)

A lively row took place Monday night at the corner of William and Wellington streets, when two local young men endeavoured to tout out of town a number of Polacks and Italians For a time caps, mufflers, baggage and other articles of apparel flew in all directions, and even the deadly stiletto got in its ugly thrust.

It appears that the foreigners were up town, and one or two of them imbibed too freely in the flowing bowl. The two local young men came along and a few words of a friendly nature were exchanged. Constable Short also put in an appearance and warned the gang to move on home before getting into trouble and the two local youths volunteered to pilot the natives of Sunny Italy to their boarding houses, a couple of box cars.

While on the way home the evil spirits began to work, and after a short parlance, which was of a rather boisterous nature, blows were exchanged, and the hair began to fly as well as the men grappled. They rolled in the snow and finally one of the foreigners drew forth a short knife with an ugly nicked blade and stabbed one of the young men in the side, whereupon the foreigners ran pell-mell away from the scene of the battle.

Blood flowed freely from the side of the young man, and only added to his thirst for revenge. He and his companion gave chase to the Italians, but they quickly were out of view, and out of the way of all harm.

FAIRLY LARGE MEETING HEARS ISSUES DISCUSSED

Conservatives Hold Mass Meeting Last Night at Which Considerable Was Said About Workmen's Compensation and Nothing Whatever About Tax Reform--Hon. A. B. Morine Was the Principal Speaker.

Last night at the Opera House, there was a fair, but by no means overflowing, audience, assembled ostensibly to hear the issues of the present campaign discussed in the interests of Mr. Peck and the Whitney government. The chief speaker was Hon. A. B. Morine, of Toronto, President of the Dominion (Temperance) Alliance, and the way he upheld the interests of the liquor traffic at the expense of the temperance interests, was a lesson to those who hold their opinions and principles as something too sacred to be made a pawn in a game of politics.

The chair was occupied by Mr. James Kendry, and the only speakers were Mr. Peck and Mr. Morine, the latter being the principal speaker, in point of time consumed. Both speakers, as well as the chairman of course glorified the Whitney government, but it was to be noticed that both of the principal speakers, were on the defensive throughout. Both dealt with the Workman's Compensation Act, and both turned the matter over to the tender mercies of Sir James Whitney, who would be sure to do the right thing—some time. The same defensive attitude was assumed in regard to bilingual schools, and Mr. Morine championed the three-fifths clause as something which the enemies of the bar should be devoutely thankful for. Mr. Morine's address was a pretty lusty piece of special pleading, a rather good example of forensic-dust-in-the-eyes, to overlay and conceal the real merits of the issues. He is a fluent speaker with considerable skill in making a question he handles obscure, when it is in the interests of his cause to do so.

Mr. Jas. Kendry, president of the West Peterborough Conservative Association, was chairman, and made one of his characteristic chairman's addresses, in which he introduced Mr. Peck as the coming representative for East Peterborough, in the Legislature, and took advantage of the opportunity to laud the Whitney Government and spurn, in Whitneyesque fashion, the efforts of Mr. Hall to do something for the workingman in the shape of the Workmen's Compensation Act. He then called upon Mr. Peck.

The Candidate's Remarks.

The candidate was well received when he arose to speak. He had often been on the same platform before, he said, but never on behalf of such a humble person as himself, whereupon an enthusiast in the audience interjected a fervent "Hear! Hear!" After the customary tribute to the ladies and their "quiet, gentle influence in public affairs", Mr. Peck passed on to the Workman's Compensation Act, which he admitted was not all it should be, but which, he claimed, had been left unaltered, by the Liberals, since its inception, in 1885. Sir James Whitney, he said, had recognized that the Act needed amending, and had left the whole question to Sir W. R. Meredith. He had no doubt that that gentleman would bring a satisfactory bill before the House. As to the local contest, Mr. Peck said a man should be judged by what he was, and not by what he said, in regard to workmen's compensation or other matters. He did not contend that the Act was sufficiently advanced to give proper relief, but asked what had Mr. Hall or the Liberal party done to better it. He characterized their attitude as a death-bed repentance.

Mr. Peck went on to defend the Government for its expenditure in connection with Toronto University, which, he said, gave the poor of the province the only chance they would get of obtaining advanced education.

One of the audience asked Mr Peck to definitely state his position, in regard to bilingual schools.

The candidate explained that the so-called bilingual schools, as he understood them, were in districts where the French predominated, or where there was a large number of French scholars. In that case the French children came when they had no knowledge of English, and it was necessary to address them in French in order to give them instruction in the English language. He read the law upon this point and the further resolution that English should be the language of instruction and all communication, except where it was impracticable when the child did not understand English. He believed that this law should be enforced and that every effort should be made to see that every pupil, French or English, should receive a reasonable English education. Mr. Peck thought that if there were reforms to be made Dr. Merchant's report, when presented would indicate them.

Hon. A. B. Morine.

Hon. A. B. Morine, K.C., of Toronto, and late leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland was the principal speaker of the evening. He advocated Mr. Peck's election on the ground that the Whitney Government was bound to be returned, and Peterborough should not be represented by a member in opposition. As to the two candidates, he was sure both were respectable men and worthy of confidence, but the electors of Peterborough were better able to judge on that point than he was.

The speaker said that he had come close in ouch with Mr. N. W. Rowell, the new Liberal Leader, in Laymen's Missionary work and other movements, and paid the Opposition leader a glowing tribute on his personal integrity and high ideals. He had, as a Conservative, he said, quaked in his boots, when he heard that Mr. Rowell had been chosen as Liberal leader, as he felt that he would make his party toe the mark. However, Mr. Morine claimed that Mr. Rowell had subordinated his own convictions to a platform prepared by a party caucus, and accused him of wavering on the temperance question, in spite of his own strong, personal convictions on this point. Mr. Morine found in the brusqueness and autocratic demeanour of Premier Whitney, of which complaint is being heard, qualities to be admired.

He argued that Mr. Rowell's manifesto was only clear-cut and definite on one point, and that was on the abolition of the three-fifths' clause. Mr. Morine defended the Whitney Government's attitude in this respect, and claimed that the three-fifths' clause was in the best interests of the temperance cause.

In regard to bi-lingual schools, the speaker maintained that it was a question of the administration of the law, rather than of policy. He claimed that the agitation in this matter was due, principally, to the Toronto Star. He believed, as representatives of both parties had said, that English should be taught in every school. This was an English province and every child should be educated to speak English. He believed, however, that the proper working out of this proposition should be left in the hands of experts, inspectors, etc. In regard to the failure in the supply of school teachers, Mr. Morine laid the blame on the poor salaries paid teachers, and to the fact that the young people were entering more remunerative professions.

Mr. Morine had a good deal to say in regard to the Workmen's Compensation Act and questioned the sincerity of Mr. Rowell and Mr. Hall on the subject. He argued that the Whitney Government had instructed Sir William Meredith to go into the matter and bring in a bill to the Legislature. Mr. Morine contended however, that it would be difficult to avoid lawsuits, in spite of what measure was brought in. He claimed that the present English Compensation Act had been the cause of more law suits than any other measure, although it was more advanced than that in force in Ontario. His opinion was that the whole thing, when stripped of its verbiage, was an insurance policy, by which those who were not injured paid for those who were. He said that a workingman could insure himself against accident for $5 a year. The speaker did not think it was a matter that should be dragged into party politics at all, and accused the Liberal party of attempting to gold brick the working man. He asked why Hon. Mackenzie King, when Minister of Labour, at Ottawa, had not done something along the line he was now suggesting. He admitted that it was a matter for the Provincial Legislature to deal with; but thought that Hon. Mr. King might have accomplished something to secure a uniformity in regard to Workmen's Compensation.

The meeting closed with the usual cheers for the King, the candidate, and Hon. A. B. Morine.

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY BANQUET AT ST. PAUL'S

Mr. MacDonald, St. Paul's Missionary, Gave a Splendid Address on the Work in Korea and the Progress That is Being Made.

A very successful function was held at St. Paul's church last evening, when a banquet was given in honour of the departure of Rev. MacDonald, who leaves in the course of a short time, as St. Paul's representative to the Mission fields of Korea. It was an opportunity for the people to get acquainted with the hopeful young man, who will face the trouble and trials of the Mission fields in the far East. There was a very large crowd attended, and a most sumptuous repast was served by the ladies. At the guests' table were seated Mr. H. B. Cowan, President of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. On his right was Mr. MacDonald. On his left was Mr. A. E. Armstrong, and the others were Rev. Mr. Rollins, Rev. Mr. Keith, Rev. Mr. Pogue and Mr. Wm. Madill, Superintendent of the Sunday School. Mr. Cowan acted as toast master.

Mr. Cowan, who presided acceptably as chairman, made a very neat and approriative address, prior to the address of Mr. MacDonald. Mr. Cowan said, in part, as follows:

"This missionary work is not a work that can be done in a short while. It is not a work, that we can say at any time, that our day's work is done. A fact to be emphasized is that there are not enough to do that day's work, and I think the Presbyterian Church should be able to send a few more missionaries to assist. It is beautiful to see how a young man, like Mr. MacDonald, should devote his young life to the service of his Master, and I wish him every success in his great undertaking.

After a few other remarks, he called on Sheriff Hall to propose a toast to Mr. McDonald.

Sheriff Hall made a brief speech, in which he extended congratulations to the congregation upon the fact that they had produced such a splendid missionary as Mr. MacDonald. "We sympathize with him in his work," said the speaker. "I once heard a Missionary, who said he did not want the sympathy of the people with him in his work, but I just want to say that that man either did not know the meaning of sympathy, or did not know its benefits." After several other appropriate remarks, the speaker concluded: "If our missionaries succeed, it will be our success, and it is our rejoicing". After this, the toast to Mr. MacDonald was proposed, to which he replied, in a splendid speech.

Rev. Mr. MacDonald's Address.

"It is good to see men gathered to listen to missionary addresses as we are to-night,' began Mr. MacDonald. "I consider it a privilege to represent you to the best of my ability in the Mission field. It is a serious matter for a man to go out to the Mission field with such a great task to accomplish. But, on the other hand, it is a source of encouragement to think he is sent out by such a body as this, and by these men, especially when he knows he has their sympathy. I hope I will cause you no disgrace nor disonour when I come back in six or seven years."

"Over 1,000,000 of the population of the East live in Korea, and unless we evangelize them, they will not be evangelized, as the Presbyterians are the only Evangelists in Korea. We read of the revolution in China, which simply means she is struggling for a new birth, and the great movement in Italy, Persia, Turkey, and, in fact, we find that there is a new spirit in all the East. In 1871, when the United States made the great overtures for civilization, Korea was a hermit and knew nothing and cared nothing, but that state of things has changed. The 20th century rushed in new commercial, social and religious light—a new Korea—a nation in a day. I will not discuss the physical features of the nation, but let it suffice to say, that in size, it is only about one-third the size of Ontario, but it has almost twice the population of all Japan, which is by no means insignificant. People think that Korea is in the far north, but they are mistaken; we are further north here in this city. Going straight west from Korea, you would come to Rome, and New York. The climate is warm in summer, and extremely cold in winter, especially in the north. Natural resources are great, and its agricultural capacities are scarcely touched. The mines are rich in gold, silver, copper and coal, and on account of the superstition of the natives, these mines are undeveloped. From a commercial standpoint, Korea is one of the great nations of the world. In 1885, the first Protestant missionary entered Corea, and in 1887, the first Lord's Supper was celebrated, and then the mission ary work progressed up until 1907, when the great Korean revival broke out, and it is still in progress. It seems as though it may not die out until it is a Christian country. The opinions of some great men are that in ten years Korea could be a Christian nation with great Christian influences on the other nations. The converts appreciate Bible classes. They not only study the Bible, but they have grasped the idea of self-sacrifice. These poor people contribute at the rate of $10.00, in gold, per member, and in the condition they are, this amount is equal to four times what the average church goer gives in Canada. Is it any wonder the Church in Korea is growing, the converts are so enthusiastic over the extension of Christianity. The work is not ours, it is their own. They are self supporting, and they have taken for their motto: "Korea for Christ".

We only begin the work, and then the native Evangelists carry on the campaign. Because of the great poverty, it is sometimes impossible for the natives to give, even a single cent, and in a case like this, they devote a certain portion of their time to the preaching of the gospel. Mr. J. R. Mott tells us that Korea is the key to Asia, and it is seen that if Korea keeps on, it will be a Christian nation in a few years. In China, the missionaries have up-hill work even yet, while in Korea, the Christians are growing so fast, numerically, that the missionaries will scarcely be able to keep in touch with them. It must then be either a distorted Church or a Christian one, and unles we keep a number of missionaries to instruct these men, we tremble to see what the result will be. If we succeed, it will mean the evangelization of the whole East, but, if we fail, it will mean its practical destruction.

Rev. Mr. Armstrong's Address.

Mr. R. E. Wood proposed a toast to Rev. Mr. Armstrong, who responded in a very interesting speech. "My first word is to congratulate you, and express to you on behalf of the foreign missionaries, their thanks for your support of your representative.

People are different now than in 1842, when our first missionary went out to New Hebrides. The people took about six months at that time to consent to send him. They thought he was a religious fanatic, going away into the ends of the earth to preach the religion of the Lord. They said: 'When Christ wants to civilize the heathen, he will see to it'.

The speaker here related several instances relative to the advancement of the missionary work, and circumstances in connection with it.

Continuing, he said: "I think Mr. MacDonald is not to be pitied, but envied. Sympathy means pity and he needs no pity. We will see the Lord crowned King of Kings in all the heathen lands of the earth. We will see the past and present tense used in the Bible, where is now the future. Recently a missionary returned from the Fiji Islands, and surprised us greatly by reporting that neither missionaries nor money were further needed on those Islands, that it was now a Christian land. Fifty years ago, these same islands swarmed with naked, painted, and tatooed cannibals, carrying spears and weapons, apparently always at war with one and other, and look at the result of a comparatively short period of time.

Seventeen years ago, the church was begun in Korea, with seven members, and now it has grown and branched off until it has 43,000. Do we want any more progress than that? There are more Bibles sold in Korea than any other book—12,000,000 being disposed of last year alone. In one city in Korea, there are 10,000 out of the total population of 60,000, church goers. They only ask for eight more missionaries, and I think the Church should be able to send them out in the next five years. I think this is the golden age. A man can do more with his life within the next ten years, than he could in a whole century some time ago, there are such grand opportunities. Korea is the most responsive of all the mission fields of to-day. Never has Christianity made such rapid strides, as it is making to-day. This is a strategic moment. Will the Presbyterian Church in Canada do her share? We are directly responsible in God's sight for the people of this present generation. God has flung wide open the doors of the heathen world, and has invited the Church to enter. How long these doors will remain open, no one can tell".

At the close of Mr. Armstrong's address, Mr. Pogue proposed a toast to the sister congregations, and Rev. Mr. Rollins and Rev. Mr. Keith made brief replies.

Mr. Hill, President of the Young Men's Bible Class, conveyed greetings to Mr. MacDonald from the Bible Class, after which the ladies were thanked for the excellent repast which they furnished, and the evening's proceedings were brought to a close by the pronouncing of the benediction by Rev. Mr. Pogue.

BEGIN IT TO-DAY

That good old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine," is proved over and over in our daily life.

For example, when you begin to feel out of sorts, don't want to eat, and don't seem as strong a susual, if you would begin right away to use Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil, you could easily put yourself in good trim again with one bottle, or less. But when you wait and grow worse all the time, it is bound to take more.

We just got a letter from Mrs. Mary Glynn of Mt. Vernon, N.Y., who says: "When my health became rundown last March I took prompt action to improve it and was told that Vinol was the best thing to build me up. Using one bottle of Vinol has made me as well and strong again."

Don't put it off another day. If you feel the need of more strength and better blood, or if one of your family is weak and sickly, Vinol will give renewed strength and energy. If it does not, we will give you back your money. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte street; also Paynes' drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

CAUSE FOR ALARM

Loss of Appetite or Distress Afte Eating a Symptom That Should Be Disregarded.

Appetite is just a natural desire for food. Loss of appetite or stomach distress after eating indicate indigestion or dyspepsia. Over-eating is a habit very dangerous to a person's good general health.

It is not what you eat but what you digest and assimilate that does you good. Some of the strongest heaviest, and healthiest persons are moderate eaters.

There is nothing that will cause more trouble than a disordered stomach, and many people daily contract serious maladies simply through disregard or abuse of the stomach.

We urge all in Peterborough who suffer from any stomach derangement, indigestion, or dyspepsia, whether acute or chronic, to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, with the distinct understanding that we will refund their money without question or formality, if after reasonable use of this medicine, they are not perfectly satisfied with the results. We recommend them to our customers every day, and have yet to hear of any one who has not been benefitted by them. We honestly believe them to be without equal. They give very prompt relief, aiding to neutralize the gastric juices, strengthen the digestive organs, to regulate the bowels, and thus to promote perfect nutrition, and eradicate all unhealthy symptoms.

We urge you to try a 25c. box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, which gives 15 days' treatment. At the end of that time, your money will be returned to you if you are not satisfied. Of course, in chronic cases length of treatment varies. For such cases, we have two large sizes, which sell for 50c. and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store. The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

A service will be held at the house this evening at 8 o'clock, at which the Rev. J. H. Keith will officiate and the remains will be conveyed by to-morrow morning's G.T.R. train to Colborne for interment.

MRS. WM. RUTHERFORD.

Much sorrow was felt throughout the community on Wednesday last, Nov. 29th, when the news came of the death of Mrs. Wm. Rutherford of Cavan, near Ida, at the age of 79 years. Although she has been quite ill for the past week or so, her death came rather unexpectedly.

The deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Mary Elliott, was a daughter of the late Thomas Elliott and was quite young when she came with her parents to settle in the forests of Cavan township. She is the last of a family of four, two sisters and one brother, predeceased her some years ago. Her sisters were the late Mrs. Robert Stewart, Miss Margaret Elliott, and her brother, Mr. Thomas Elliott.

She was married 48 years ago to Mr. Wm. Rutherford, who is left to mourn her demise. The funeral took place on Friday to Little Lake cemetery, Peterborough. The pallbearers were Messrs. Bruce and Fred Elliott, Joseph Metheral, William Thompson, Albert Rutherford and William Pritchard. The Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Springville, conducted the service at the house.

Mrs. Rutherford was a life long member and attendant of Springville Presbyterian church. Possessing a kind and cheerful disposition, she had many friends and leaves behind her the heritage of a pure and Christian example. The sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved husband, who is left alone in his old age.

You will find that druggists everywhere speak well of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. They know from long experience in the sale of it that in cases of coughs and colds it can always be depended upon, and that it is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all dealers.

A PRESENTATION

A number of friends and neighbours gathered at the home of Mr. Fred Cann, Smith, last evening, to bid farwell to Miss Vera Cann, the bride elect. Games were indulged in and a social evening was spent, during the course of which the following address was presented:

Smith, December 5th, 1911.

Dear Vera,—We, your many friends and neighbours have assembled to extend to you our best wishes, and to spend an evening with you, ere you depart from our midst. We feel that we cannot allow you to go without showing some marks of the general esteem in which you are regarded in the neighbourhood.

While you have not resided in our immediate neighbourhood for a great many years, yet you, and the family to which you belong, are no strangers to us and during your sojourn among us, and your social intercourse, you have contributed abundantly toward making life pleasant in the circle in which we have moved.

Let us assure you that our best wishes for a long, happy and prosperous life, go with you to your new home.

As a token of our esteem, we present to you this chair ,knowing that you will not regard it, for its intrinsic value alone, but for the motive which prompts us in giving it.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbours.

Mrs. D. Mahood,
Mrs. G. Simpson,
Mrs. B. L. Tully.

Mrs. George Simpson read the address and Mrs. B. L. Tully made the presentation, which took the form of a beautiful chair.

Miss Vera Cann, the bride elect, was thoroughly surprise, made a suitable reply and expressed her appreciation of the good will extended to her by her many friends, who were gathered together.

Refreshments were then served and a very pleasant evening was terminated.

INITIAL OPENING LITERARY SOCIETY

Rev. Father O'Brien Lectured at Campbellford

Rev. J. J. O'Brien, of Lakefield, was in Campbellford on Tuesday renewing old acquaintances, and in the evening delivered the first of a series of lectures that have been arranged under the auspices of St. Mary's Club. The rev. lecturer spoke to a capacity house, and handled his allotted subject, "The Historical Character of the Middle Ages," in a scholarly manner.

Mr. D. J. Lynch, L.L.B., presided, and previous to the lecture there was an exceedingly high-class concert.

A feature of the evening was the singing by the audience of the "Song for St. Mary's Club" written for the Society by Rev. Fr. Casey.

The Club is erecting a splendid skating rink, and a senior and junior hockey team is talked of, with the famous Pat Shannon as manager.

RECOGNIZED BY THE GUARDS

(Lindsay Warder.)

Chief Chilton and Constable Geo. Foster arrived home yesterday morning after leaving Harry Graham in safe keeping with the governor of the Kingston penitentiary.

The chief spoke of his trip and of the prisoner in a pleasant manner, and said Graham was not in the least discontented over his inevitable doom.

Graham sent his best regards to some of the boys of Lindsay, whom he knew and lavishly entertained when he was their railway idol.

The prisoner was at once recognized by the guards in Kingston pen, as he entered and was divested of his civilian suit and given a number by which he will be known for three years.

The prisoner felt the want of the clothing he bequeathed his jail friends in Lindsay before reaching Kingston as the temperature was far beneath freezing.

Waiting For The Cold Weather

The local knights of the "Stanes" will no doubt be pleased to learn that the work of preparing the rink for the season's operations is under way. As usual the work is unde rthe capable supervision of Mr. Angus McIntosh. Everything is in readiness for the advent of cold weather, which is an essential requisite to the making of ice.

The curling rink opened last year on December 10th and closed on March 25th, making a season of about three and a half months' duration.

Six Montrealers, who had been working at the Creawell lumber camps, were arraigned in the Police Court this morning, charged with being drunk and disorderly at the C. P. R. station yesterday afternoon. They were all discharged. Their names were: John Wanberton, Homer Dumontette, Harry Metivier, Omare Deroch, Arthur Cherbunneau and John Edwards. Only two of the bunch had tickets, and the rest declared their intention of walking to Montreal. They had walked all the way from the lumber camp. The informations were laid by Mr. Pinchin, C.P.R. local detective.

CANADA'S FUTURE

Dominion Must Believe in Herself, Says Earl Grey

DEFENDS HON. MR. BRYCE

London, Dec. 7.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—At the Canadian Club last night, Earl Grey was the chief guest, Lord Strathcona presiding. Earl Grey responding to the toast of the Dominion, humorously remarked that for seven years he had to balance himself on the tight-rope of platitudinous generalities, but the success which friends were kind enough to say he achieved was only a fraction of the success which the Duke of Connaught would achieve. Canada was the belle-ball of the Empire, and there was plenty of evidence she was now receiving all the bouquets. After seven years residence, he returned, convinced that Canada, like her wheat, was number one hard.

Speaking of her juxtaposition to the United States, Earl Grey eulogised the Canadian clubs of the Dominion, declaring the directors were only too glad to let the clubs be pulpits for good American preachers. He was vain enough to say that the United States obtained equally as much advantage from its juxtaposition, and Canada hope more and more every year to set an example of high living which might have good results on her powerful neighbor.

He continued: "I hear the British Ambassador has been attacked for the part he played in the reciprocity arrangements. The people who criticise the ambassador don't know what they're talking about. Ambassador Bryce has no more to do with reciprocity than you. The British Ambassador is the unpaid ambassador of the Canadian people. Have you ever reflected what a note of indignation there would have been if he had refused to represent the views of the Canadian Government in his official capacity? You would very soon have had a demand on the part of Canadians for an ambassador of their own.

Alluding to the emigration of Americans to the western provinces, Earl Grey said in his opinion it had only just begun. Canada was getting the pick of Americans who became as loyal citizens of Britain as they had been of the United States. His opinion had always been that only the complete union with the other side would be when Canada absorbed the United States.

Canada must believe in herself. Had she done so a little earlier, she would not have allowed the buying of Alaska by the U. S., or the Imperial Parliament giving a mail contract to line steamers going to New York, when Canada had a port miles nearer Liverpool. He hoped Lord Strathcona would live to see the accomplishment of the all red route.

Three Blacks Lynched.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 7.—Two negroes and one young negress were burned to death by a mob of white land tenants, who object to the occupancy of land by negroes, near Savannah, Tenn., Tuesday, according to meagre reports received here yesterday. The lynching is said to have occurred ten miles from Clifton, Tenn.

The three negroes were traveling to a gin with a load of seed cotton. They were waylaid and tied to the wagon load of cotton, it is said, and the mob, after making a fire of the wagon, stood guard until the negroes were cremated.

Fire In Toronto.

Toronto, Dec. 7.—Fire, and the attendant flood from twenty lays of hose, through which the streams were held at high pressure by several engines, damaged W. A. Dunn's lumber yard and planing mill, 106 Davenport road, the Old Woman's Home, 53 Belmont street, and surrounding buildings to the extent of $60,000. The fire was a stubborn one to fight, owing to the exceedingly inflammable nature of the materials at hand, and to a defect in the roof construction of the home building, and the insufficient water pressure at the start.

A LAST SACRIFICE

Chinese Regent Resigns in Effort to Save Throne

REPENTANCE IS TOO LATE

Pekin, Dec. 7.—An edict announcing the resignation of the Regent, Prince Chun, was issued yesterday by the Empress Dowager. It is signed by the members of the Cabinet, and points out that the administration has been unpopular and that a constitutional government has not yet been established, explaining this by the fact that complications arose, the people's hearts were broken and the country was thrown into turmoil. The Regent regrets that his repentance came too late and feels that if he continued in power his commands would soon be disregarded.

The Regent has been granted 50,000 taels annually from the Imperial household allowances.

The Regent sacrificed himself in a last effort to save the throne for his son, but unless all evidences fail, it is too late. Premier Yuan Shi Kai has let Pekin know that he has taken the British Minister, Sir John Jordan, into his confidence. He has told the Minister his plans, and says that he hopes much from the Minister's mediation.

On the other hand, the rebels last night confidently stated that Yuan Shi Kai is their man. They describe him as a master statesman, because he is accomplishing the transition from the Manchu dynasty to a Republican without a massacre or an attack on the legations.

PROBE GOING ON.

Revelations Expected In Both Philadelphia and Denver.

Philadelphia, Dec. 7.—The McNamara brothers were responsible for explosions in this city which damaged structural iron works on several building operations, according to Wm. J Burns, the detective, who yesterday arrived from Cleveland.

"Yes," he said, "I am positive that both of them were responsible for all the explosions in this city on structural iron work during the last few years, and others are implicated."

"Will the future arrests include any past or present members of the structural ironworkers union?" he was asked.

"I do not care to say, but I will say this—the National Board of the association appropriated certain sums to John J. McNamara, and in my opinion they knew the money was to be used for dynamiting purposes."

Burns Agents In Denver.

Denver, Col., Dec. 7.—Hoping to clear up some of the mysterious dynamitings in Colorado in recent years, agents of Wm. J. Burns arrived yesterday to conduct the investigation It is said that the detectives will base their inquiries on the confession of Harry Orchard, now serving a life sentence for slaying Governor Steunenberg of Idaho, and evidence given in his confession.

The investigation is said to be a part of the federal inquiry conducted by Special Assistant Attorney-General Oscar Lawlor, now in Los Angeles in connection with the McNamara case.

Four Die In Fire.

Philadelphia, Dec. 7.—Four bodies a man, two women and a child, have been taken from the ruins of the Marie apartment house. They have not been identified, but it is believed they are the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Balfour, their child, and Miss Baker, who were first reported to have escaped. About twenty persons, several of them women prominent in society, were in danger.

The burned building was a four storey stone residence, which had been converted into an apartment house. Most of the occupants, a majority of whom are women, had retired for the night when the flames were discovered on the second floor.

Several women received injuries by jumping from windows, and four firemen were overcome by smoke. The loss was $100,000.

Rats Dined on His $2,565.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 7 The life's savings of Jack Simpson of Aitken-Minn., amounting to $2,565, securely hidden from burglars, were reduced to pulp by hungry rats and mice, and in a letter received by President Taft he appeals for the redemption of the pulverized fragments by the federal treasury.

His wealth, accumulated to buy a farm, Simpson explained, was placed in a box and deposited between the "upstairs floor and ceiling." No human being disturbed it, but when he took it from its hiding place, he found it reduced to dust by the ravages of rodents. The President has referred the matter to the Treasury Department for investigation.

"Plain Warning," 'Tis Said.

Paris, Dec. 7.—The Paris newspapers give great prominence to the German Chancellor's speech in the Reichstag on Tuesday. While they greet his utterances with satisfaction as marking a welcome close to the long series of negotiations and conversations, which at times threatened the peace of Europe, they are of the opinion that the Chancellor's speech does not altogether dissipate "the nightmare of an impending European cataclysm" in view of the plain warning to any who may venture to stand in the way of the policy of German expansion, which the Chancellor proclaims for the future.

A THIRST FOR OFFICE

Wholesale Dismissals Discussed in the Commons

MR. FORBES' GRAIN ACT

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—That the thirst for preferment and office, which, among the Conservative members themselves, caused Mr. E. B. Osler to publicly declare that he "had never been so humiliated in his life before," extended in all its eagerness and acrimony to the rank and file of the party was demonstrated in Parliament yesterday. The coalition Government's feverish exploitation of the spoils system was laid bare following the resolution of Hon. A. K. McLean, calling for papers and information concerning all dismissals since the advent of the Nationalist-Conservative regime.

The debate was one of the liveliest of the session. Mr. Borden expressed the hope that the civil service act would soon be extended to a considerable portion of the outside service.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in his reply, criticised the action of the Government in superseding his nominee for the International Boundary Commission. He was answered by Mr. Foster, who held that the confidential nature of the commission's work made it absurd to have three political opponents of the Government in power composing it.

The Postoffice and Public Works Departments were chiefly under fire. In the former, said F. B. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.), the spoils system was in full swing, but when one came to the Department of Public Works it was carried almost to the extent of petty larceny.

A. E. Lancaster (Lincoln), declared that it was not a question of spoils, but of restitution. The action of the Laurier administration in dismissing 180 Welland Canal employes in 1896, was worse than petty larceny; it was grand larceny.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier came valiantly to the championship of his Department, and announced his intention of righting some of the wrongs which he said were wrought by the late Government.

"Every man, who has been cut off by my friends on the other side of the House, if he comes to me for relief, he will get it," he declared.

"I have had to dismiss quite a few postmasters and I will dismiss more, but I will do so with a due regard to justice and along the lines of the rule laid down by this Parliament."

When asked by Mr. Carvell, if when the papers were brought down, he found he had made an error in the case of the postmistress of Bath, N.B., he would not sanction her dismissal, he said: "Most decidedly. I shall not be a party to injustice."

Shortly after the commencement of yesterday's session, the House went into committee to consider the following resolution, proposed by Hon. George E. Foster:

"Resolved, that it is expedient to consolidate and revise the Manitoba Grain Act, chapter 83 of the revised statutes, 1906, and part II. of the Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of of the revised statutes, 1906, to establish a board of commissioners to administer the grain trade of Canada, and to provide for expenses in connection therewith, and to charge the board with the operation and management of such terminal elevators as may be constructed, leased or acquired by the Government of Canada."

Mr. Foster explained that the bill which it was proposed to introduce, founded on the resolution, was practically the same as one passed by the Senate at last session, but which did not go through the House. To this the Government itself intended to introduce some amendments. The resolution was passed and the bill introduced.

The adoption of the plan of under secretaries as followed in England is being seriously considered by the Government. At present it is practically impossible for the Ministers to give the necessary attention to details. As the country expands the work has kept increasing until it means now that a conscientious Minister, to keep pace with his Departmental duties, must labor day and night.

It is felt that the appointment of under secretaries would relieve the Ministers, and would lend general efficiency. The under secretaries as in England, would be members of Parliament, but not members of the Cabinet.

It is suggested for the present, there be under secretaries to the Ministers of Interior, Militia, Marine and Fisheries, Public Works, Railways and Canals, and Agriculture.

While it is doubtful if anything will be done this session, when the general reorganization of the Departments take place the plan will be thoroughly discussed and investigated and enquiries will be made as to how the English plan works.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, has just concluded new parcel post arrangements, the general outline of which is as follows:

Under the parcel post in existence at present all parcel post parcels from France come to Canada via England. Canada had no direct arrangement with France, but made arrangements through England, and when parcels left France and reached London they became, in so far as Canada was concerned, British parcels and the charges were settled on this basis. Under the new arrangements parcels will come direct from France to Canada and go direct from Canada to France, Canada using the Allan Line steamers, which now carry on a service from Canada to Cherbourg and is a line subsidized by Canada.

Building Collapse Kills Four.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 7.—Under the glare of searchlights, police and firemen last night searched for the bodies of four persons caught in the wreckage of a three-storey concrete building, which collapsed yesterday at noon, killing four workmen and injuring 21. The building was being erected for the Presto-Lite Co. and the contractor believes that owing to the recent cold weather the concrete had not set properly.

Peonage In Sugar Fields.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Depicting conditions in the sugar beet fields of Colorado approaching peonage, James Bodkin of Mead, Colo., yesterday told the so-called "sugar trust" investigating committee of the House, that city derelicts, recruited from the slums, were kept practically in a state of bondage.

W. A. Dube Suspended.

Quebec, Dec. 7.—The Minister of Railways has suspended Mr. W. A. Dube, superintendent of the Montreal-Ste. Flavie section of the Intercolonial, and has ordered an inquiry into his political conduct anterior to the 21st of September last.

Explosion In Mint.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 7.—Two employes were killed and forty injured by a gas explosion in the gold testing department of the imperial mint yesterday. The whole plant was destroyed, and the building very seriously damaged.

"Please Postpone All Deaths."

New York, Dec. 7—James E. Hewes, clerk to the New Rochelle Board of Health, has sent out appeals to all the physicians in New Rochelle requesting them to keep their dying patients alive until the first of the new year, so as to keep the death rate down. Last year New Rochelle had 338 deaths, which gave a rate of 11.8 a thousand.

Nearly a Tragedy.

Kingston, Dec. 7.—In a fire early yesterday morning the home of Mrs. Margaret O'Neil, Sydenham street, was destroyed, while Mrs. O'Neil's daughter, Kate, and her son, Joseph, had narrow escapes from death.

Appeal to Taft.

Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 7.—The Persian students resident in Switzerland have cabled an appeal to President Taft asking him, in the name of humanity and liberty, to protect Persia against foreign aggression.

Q. What is astigmatism of the eye?
A. Astigmatism is an uneven curvature of the eye and causes a double focus. As the eye always strives for clear vision, this double focus annoys the brain, and causes headache and nervousness. We make lenses called cylinders to correct astigmatism.
Q. What causes double vision?
A. Double vision is caused by the eye not being in line, that is, one may turn up or have a tendency to do so, or both may turn in, a weak muscular system is the cause, a weak nervous system is back of it all.

We would be pleased to have you call and let us fully explain how such conditions can be relieved by glasses.

QUALITY, SKILL, & CARE,
THE LADDER BY WHICH WE CLIMBED
To Those Requiring Glasses

Eight years is a short time in the life of man, but it is a period of sufficient length, in business, to carry with it a guarantee of honest effort and satisfaction.

For this number of years I have carried on an Optical business in this city and I have fitted thousands of people with glasses. The fact that I have been successful leads me to believe that my methods are right and for that reason, I wish to give you the additional assurance that there will be no change in them in the future. I am in a position to give you the best of everything that means eye comfort.

It is barely possible that you are in need of new lenses, frame or an eye glass and I would ask that you give me the privilege of giving your eyes a scientific examination and of providing the glasses for you if you need them.

I exercise the greatest care in the examination and fitting of the glasses. I do not overlook the feature of making glasses which will add greatly to the personal appearance of those who wear them. In other words, every detail will have my most careful consideration.

I carry the largest up-to-date Optical Stock in Peterboro, and grind all my own lenses. You will incur no obligation by calling and consulting with me.

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

She nodded.

"I wrote to you a week ago."

"I have been staying near here," Wrayson said, "and my letters have not been forwarded."

He bent a little lower over the table. The perfume of violet scent was almost unbearable, but he did not flinch.

"You had some news for me?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes!" she answered. "I am not going to tell you now. We are going to sit outside after dinner. You must come to us there. No good having smart friends unless you make use of them," she added with a shrill little laugh.

"I shall take some chairs and order coffee," Wrayson said. "In the meantinme——?"

"If you like to order a bottle of champagne and tell the waiter to put it on your bill, we shan't be offended," Blanche declared. "We were just wondering whether we could run to it."

"You must do me the honour of being my guests for dinner also," Wrayson declared, calling a waiter. "It was very good of you to remember to write."

The friend murmured something about it being very kind of the gentleman. Blanche shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh! I remembered right enough," she said. "It wasn't that. But there, wait until I've told you about it. It's an odd story, and sometimes I wish I'd never had anything to do with it. I get a cold shiver every time I think of that old man who took me to dine at Luigi's. Outside in three-quarters of an hour, then!"

"I will keep some chairs and order coffee," Wrayson said, turning away.

"And bring one of your friends," Blanche added. "It won't do him any harm. We shan't bite him!"

"I will bring them both," Wrayson promised.

He went back to his own table and people watched him curiously.

"I believe," he said quietly, as he sat down, "that if there is a person in the world who can put us on the track of those letters, it is the lady with whom I have just been talking."

The Baron looked across at the two women with new interest.

"What on earth have they got to do with it, Wrayson?" he asekd.

"The fair one was a friend of Barnes'," Wrayson answered. "It was at her flat that he called the night he was murdered."

"You are sure," Duncan asked, "that the letters have not been found yet by the other side?"

"Quite sure," the Baron answered. "We have agents in Mexonia, even about the King's person, and we should hear in an hour if they had the letters."

"Presuming, then," Duncan said thoughtfully, "that Barnes was murdered for the sake of the letters—and as he was smurdered on the very night he was going to hand them over to the other side, I don't see what else we can suppose—the crime would appear to have been committed by some one on our side."

"It certainly does seem so," the Baron admitted.

"And this man Bentham! He was the agent for—the King's people. He too was murdered, Baron!"

"Well?"

"Who killed Barnes? He robbed me of my right, but I want to know."

The Baron shook his head.

"I have no idea," he said gravely. "We have agents in London, of course, but no one who would go to such lengths. I do not know who killed Barnes, nor do I know who killed Bentham."

There was a short silence. The Baron's words were impressively spoken. It was impossible to doubt their veracity. Yet both to Wrayson and to Duncan they had a serious import. The same thought was present in the mind of all three of them—and each avoided the other's eyes. Wrayson, however, was not disposed to let the matter go without one more effort. The corners of his mouth tightened, and he looked the Baron steadily in the face.

"Baron," he said, "I have told you that there is a man in London who has set himself to solve the mystery of Barnes' death. The two people whom he would naturally suspect are Miss Fitzmaurice and myself. There is strong presumptive evidence against us, owing to my silence at the inquest, and at any moment we might either of us have to face this charge. Knowing this, do I understand you to say that, if the necessity arose, you would be absolutely unable to throw any light upon the matter?"

"Absolutely!" the Baron declared. "Both those murders are as complete an enigma to me as to you."

"You have agents in London?"

"Agents, yes!" the Baron declared, "but they are in the nature of detectives only. They would not dream of going to such lengths, either with instructions or without them. Neither, I am sure, would any one who was employed to collect evidence upon the other side."

There was no more to be said. Wrayson rose to his feet a little abruptly.

"The air is stifling here," he said. "Let us go outside and take our coffee."

They found seats on the verandah, looking out upon the promenade. The Baron looked a little dubiously at the stream of people passing backwards and forwards.

"Are we not a litle conspicuous?" he remarked.

"Does it really matter?" Wrayson asked. "It is only for this evening. I shall leave for London to-morrow, in any event. Besides, it is part of the bargain that we take coffee with these ladies. Here they are."

Wrayson introduced his friends with perfect gravity. Chairs were found, and coffee and liqueurs ordered. Wrayson contrived to sit on the outside, and next to his copper-haired friend.

"Now for our little talk," he said. "Will you have a cigarette? You'll find these all right."

She threw a sidelong glance at him and sighed. What an exceedingly earnest young man this was!"

"Well," she said, "I know you'll give me no peace till I've told you. There may be nothing in it. That's for you to find out. I think myself there is. It was last Thursday night in the promenade at the Alhambra that I saw her."

"Saw whom?" Wrayson interrupted.

"I'm coming to that," she declared. "Let me tell you my own way. I was talking to a friend, and I overheard all that she said. She was quietly dressed, and she looked frightened; a poor, pale-faced little thing she was anyway, and she was walking up and down like a stage-doll, peering round corners and looking everywhere, as though she'd lost somebody. Presently she went up to one of the attendants, and I heard her ask him if he knew a Mr. Augustus Howard who came there often. The man shook his head, and then she tried to describe him. It was a bit flattering, but an idea jumped into my head all of a sudden that it was Barnes she was looking for."

"By Jove!" Wrayson muttered, under his breath. "Did you speak to her?"

She nodded.

"I waited till she was alone, and then I made her sit down with me and describe him all over again. By the time she'd finished, I was jolly well sure that it was Barnes she was after."

"Did you tell her?" Wrayson asked.

"Not I!" she answered. "I didn't want a scene there, and besides, it's your little show, not mine. I told her that I felt sure I recognized him, and that if she would be in the same place at nine o'clock a week from that night, I could send someone whom I thought would be able to tell her about her friend. That was last Thursday. You want to be just outside the refreshment room at nine o'clock to-morrow night, and you can't mistake her. She looks as though she'd blown in from an A B C shop."

Wrayson possessed himself of her hand for a moment in an impulse of apparent gallantry. Something which rustled pleasantly was instantly and safely transferred to the metal purse which hung from her waistband.

"You will allow me?" he murmured.

"Rather," she answered, with a little laugh. "What a stroke of luck it was meeting you here! Flo and I were both stoney. We hadn't a sovereign between us when we'd paid for our tickets."

"Have you seen anything of Barnes' brother?" he asked.

"Once or twice at the Alhambra," she answered. "He was wearing his brother's clothes, but he looked pretty dicky."

"You didn't mention this young woman to him, I suppose?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"Not I! You're the only person I've told. Hope it brings you luck."

Wrayson rose to his feet. The Baron and Duncan followed his example. They took leave of the ladies and turned towards the promenade.

"I'm going to London by the morning boat," Wrayson announced. "I believe I'm on the track of those letters."

They walked up and down for a few moments talking. As they passed the front of the hotel, they heard a shrill peal of laughter. Blanche and her friend were talking to a little group of men. The Baron smiled.

"We have broken the ice for them," he said, "but I am afraid that we are already forgotten."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Wrayson looked anxiously at his watch. It was already ten minutes past nine, and although he was standing on the precise spot indicated, there was no one about who in the least resembled the young woman of whom he was in search. The overture to the ballet was being played, a good many people were strolling about, or seated at the small round tables, but they were all of the usual class, the ladies ornate and obvious, and all having the air of habitues. In vain Wrayson scanned the faces of the passers-by, and even the occupants of the back seats. There was no sign of the young woman of whom he was in search.

Presently he began to stroll somewhat aimlessly about, still taking note of every one amongst the throng, and in a little while he caught sight of a familiar figure, sitting alone at one of the small round tables. He accosted him at once.

"How are you, Heneage?" he said quietly. "What are you doing in town at this time of the year?"

Heneage started when he was addressed, and his manner, when he recognised Wrayson, lacked altogether its usual composure.

"I'm all right," he answered. "Beastly hot in town, though isn't it? I'm off in a day or two. Where have you been to?"

"North of France," Wrayson answered. "You look as though you wanted a change!"

"I'm going to Scotland directly I can get away."

The two men looked at one another for a moment. Heneage was certainly looking ill. There were dark lines under his eyes, and his face seemed thinner. Then, too, he was still in his morning clothes, his tie was ill-arranged, and his linen not unexceptionable. Wrayson was puzzled. Something had gone wrong with the man.

"You see," he said quietly, "I have been forced to disregard your warning. I shall be in England for some little time at any rate. May I ask, am I in any particular danger?"

Heneage shook his head.

"Not from me, at any rate!"

Wrayson looked at him for a moment steadily.

"Do you mean that, Heneage?" he asked.

"Yes!"

"You are satisfied, then, that neither I nor the young lady had anything to do with the death of Morris Barnes?"

Heneage moved in his chair uneasily.

"Yes!" he answered. "Don't talk to me about that damned business," he added, with a little burst of half-suppressed passion. "I've done with it. Come and have a drink."

Wrayson drew a sigh of relief. Perhaps, for the first time, he realized how great a weight this thing had been upon his spirits. He had feared Heneage!—not this man, but the cold, capable Stephen Heneage of his earlier acquaintance; feared him no only for his own sake, but hers. After all, his visit to the Alhambra had brought some good to him.

Heneage had risen to his feet.

"We'll go into the American bar," he said. "Not here. The women fuss round one so. I'm glad you've turned up, Wrayson. I've got the hump!"

The bar was crowded, but they found a quiet corner. Heneage ordered a large brandy and soda, and drunk half of it at a gulp.

"How's every one?" Wrayson asked. "I haven't been in the club yet."

"All right, I believe. I haven't been in myself for a week," Heneage answered.

Wrayson looked at him in surprise.

"Haven't been in the club for a week?" he repeated. "That's rather unusual, isn't it?"

"Damn it all! I'm not obliged to go there, am I?" Heneage exclaimed testily.

Wrayson looked at him in amazement. Heneage, as a rule, was one of the most deliberate and even-tempered of men.

"Of course not," he answered. "You won't mind telling me how the Colonel is, though, will you?"

"I believe he is very well," Heneage answered more calmly. "He doesn't come up to town so often this hot weather. Forgive me for being a bit impatient, old fellow. I've got a fit of nerves, I think."

"You want a change," Wrayson said earnestly. "There's no doubt about that."

"I'm going away very soon," Heneage answered. "As soon as I can get off. I don't mind telling you, Wrayson, that I've had a shock, and it has upset me."

Wrayson nodded sympathetically.

"All right, old chap," he said. "I'm beastly sorry, but if you take my advice, you'll get out of London as soon as you can. Go to Trouville or Dinard, or some place where there's plenty of life. I shouldn't busy myself in the country, if I were you. By-the-by," he added, "there is one more question I should like to ask you, if you don't mind."

Heneage called a waiter and ordered more drinks. Then he turned to Wrayson.

"Well," he said, "go on!"

"About that little brute, Barnes' brother. Is he about still?"

REMARKABLE WORK IN SAVING LIVES

Story of Ida Lewis, Known as "The Grace Darling of America."

When Ida Lewis passed away in the Newport lighthouse, one of the bravest women in the United States ended her career. Indeed, according to the official records of the American Society of the Cross of Honor, she was the bravest woman. Well was she called the "Grace Darling of America," and worthily did she sustain the resemblance to the great English heroine. For while her life-saving exploits were not as numerous, nor quite as sensational, they were frequent enough and thrilling enough to command the admiration of the whole country. Between twenty and thirty people were saved from death in Ida Lewis' rowboat, and her faithful tending of the great lamps in the lighthouse made the sea safe for thousands more. Idawalley Zoranda Lewis was born in Newport in 1842, and when the Lime Rock lighthouse was built in 1850 her father was appointed keeper. Her father was a man well on in years, and when his health failed Ida used to do the work for him, besides rowing her younger brothers and sisters to Newport every day to attend school. Her first rescue was made when she was only 16 years old.

The title of "Grace Darling of America" was given to her in 1869, when she put out in a raging sea to the rescue of two soldiers and a boy who had capsized their sailboat. Although the men were unconscious when she got to them, she hauled them into her own frial boat and made her way back to the lighthouse, where they were revived. Her life was in peril every moment of the trip, for a fierce storm was blowing and the waves rose like mountains. For this exploit the young woman was thanked by Congress, and by the General Assembly of Rhode Island, and received a medal and $400 in cash. In January, 1867, she rescued three laborers who had taken to a boat in pusuit of a flock of frightened sheep that were swimming out to sea. The previous Winter she had saved three more soldiers, and a fortnight after her adventure with the laborers she rescued a man off the masthead of a sunken vessel. In 1881 she was pulled through the ice in the harbor by two soldiers whom she was rescuing, and when she brought them to safety finally she was near the point of death herself. From 1861 to 1896 she saved the lives of 18 people, and had formal recognition from a dozen bodies. Each Sunday she rowed ashore to attend the Methodist Church, no matter what the weather was like, for the sea could no more turn her from this duty than from her efforts to save life. Ida Lewis was married in the Fall of 1869, her husband being William H. Wilson, the skipper of a yacht. They did not get on well together, however, and in a couple of years he deserted her, and has not been heard of since. Had not Grace Darling preceeded her, it would have been thought impossible for any woman to perform the feats of strength and skill and endurance that Ida Lewis accomplished on many occasions, feats that caused General U. S. Grant to declare, on one occasion, that he had never had a soldier under his command that matched her for daring and devotion to duty.

LARGE IRRIGATION PROJECT

Three Thousand Laborers at Work in Mesopotamia.

Work has just been begun on the irrigation of the Mesopotamia desert, a long projected scheme, and the first 3,000 laborers are at work with the preliminary preparations. The British contracting engineer, Sir John Jackson, famous for dock works, has control of the contract, with Arthur Noel Whitley, another Britisher, who has been second in command on the railway construction work across the Andes, as a commander on the spot.

The work is a huge one, for it entails opening a gap through the mountains, building watercouses, dams and reservoirs. Three great barges will be built, the first at Hindia on the Euphrates, whence the first section, irrigating 600,000 acres at a cost of $7,500,000 will be worked. It will then match the work the British government has done in the lower Nile in consequence of the building of the great Assouan dam. It is expected when a regular supply of water once more reaches the arid zone it will be worth at least $200,000,000.

NASAL CATARRH

Responsible for Much Deafness, Hoarseness, Bronchitis and Stomach Trouble.

Medicated Air Will Cure

These are common diseases, but no less dangerous and difficult to cure on that account. In our climate the weather changes quickly. We are careless. Disease attacks us before we know it. A large majority of our people have nose, lung or throat troubles, and find it hard to get cured.

It's remarkable with what tenacity both the medical profession and the laity adhere to the old theory that these diseases can be reached and combated by dosing. And this despite the fact that failure to cure is ninety-nine cases out of a hundred attends this mode of treatment.

STOMACH MEDICINE CAN'T CURE

At best it is a roundabout way of trying to reach the disease which is in the air passages of the throat, nose, bronchial tubes and lungs. Leave the stomach alone—use a remedy that will carry into the minutest air cells into the tiniest cavities of the affected organs.

LIQUID REMEDIES DANGEROUS

Doctors say only "Catarrhozone" can cure—you inhale it along with the air you breath—it goes where the living disease germs are gnawing into your system—it kills these germs—it heals, soothes, it CURES.

CATARRHOZONE GUARANTEED.

Wouldn't it be wise to use Catarrhozone now—to-day—and be cured permanently?

You can send the soothing vapor of the pine woods, the richest balsams and healing essences, right to the cause of your trouble by inhaling Catarrhozone.

Little drops of wonderful curative power are distributed through the whole breathing apparatus in two minutes.

Like a miracle, that's how Catarrhozone works in bronchitis, catarrh, colds, and irritable throat. You simply breath its oily, fragrant vapor and every trace of congestion and disease flees as before fire.

So safe, infants can use it; so sure to cure, doctors prescribe it officially in preventing winter ills no person can afford to do without Catarrhozone. Used in thousands of cases without failure. Try it yourself! 25c, 50c, $1.00 sizes. Sold by all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

BIRTH RATE IN GERMANY

Remarkable Decrease in the Past Three Years.

A declining birth-rate, so long a anxiety in France, is becoming a cause of concern in Germany also. The estimates just completed by the German Statistical Office and published in the "Imperial Gazette" fully bear out previous statements as to the reality of this menace.

The total number of births in the Empire has fallen from 2,076,660 in 1908 to 2,038,357 in 1909 and to 1,982,836 in 1910. For the first time in twenty-four years the number of births has again dropped below the 2,000,000 mark, while in proportion to total population it is lower than it has been at any time in sixty years.

With a declining death-rate, there is still an annual increase of about 380,000 in the population, but, if conditions continue as they are, this rate of growth obviously cannot be much longer maintained.

INSURANCE SWINDLE

How Wolff Was Going to Profit by His Wife's Death

An ingenious insurance swindle has just failed. A man called at an insurance office and said he wanted to insure the life of a certain Frau Wolff for $1,250, claiming at the same time the customary commission. In accordance with insurance routine, the company's inspector went to Frau Wolff's house, where he was told he would find her with her husband, a cattle-dealer at the market. The inspector thereupon arranged with the insurer to meet Frau Wolff at a restaurant, and did so. She seemed a young and healthy woman, so he sent her to the company's doctor, who declared her a suitable subject for insurance. Matters would have taken their usual course, but a day or two later, the insurer appeared at the company's office to pay the first premium. As he was leaving he remarked, "So the thing is settled. I mean, if anything should happen," but here he broke off and went away. The words aroused suspicion, and the inspector, on further investigation, found that the real Frau Wolff was dying of cancer and must expire in a few days or weeks.

The idea of substitution, it appeared, was suggested by the real Frau Wolff's husband, who was in financial straits, and thought to make money out of his wife's death.

ALPINE DEATH ROLL

15 Climbers Killed in 1911; All But Two Were Without Guides.

The Alpine death roll for 1911 though probably not quite complete, shows that 115 persons were killed and 37 injured during the season. The killed include 38 Germans, 20 Austrians, 27 Swiss, 9 Frenchmen, 5 Italians, 3 Englishmen, 2 Russians, 1 Hollander, and 1 American.

As usual, the majority of the accidents seem to have been preventible, as there were only two fatal accidents to climbers who provided themselves with guides. Thirteen of the victims were looking for Edelweiss and other Alpine blooms.

Three Viennese, a man and two women, were killed on the easy climb of the Great Pyrgas, in the Tyrol. The man's boots were not even hobnailed. One of the girls wore a bobble skirt, while both wore high-heeled shoes.

Though there are many English climbers, the number of accidents among them is small, as they invariably take guides.

PIONEER IN AGRICULTURE

The Late Sir John Carling Did Much for Farming.

Sir John Carling, who died at London, Ont., in his eighty-fourth year, will be long remembered more for what he did to promote higher agriculture in Canada than anything else. It was during his term as Commissioner of Public Works and Agriculture in the Sanfield-Macdonald government of Ontario, that plans were laid for the establishment of the Ontario Agricultural College, now recognized as the leading institution of its kind on this continent. Sir John later entered the House of Commons and became Minister of Agriculture in 1885. During his tenure of office the Dominion Experimental Farms were established, and Dr. Wm. Saunders, who was a personal friend of Sir John, was secured as director. It was also while Sir John was Minister of Agriculture that the Dominion Dairying Service was inaugurated, and Dr. J. W. Robertson, then professor of dairying at the Ontario Agricultural College, was brought to Ottawa and placed in charge as Dairy Commissioner.

While Sir John was connected with other important branches of the public service, his interest in agriculture never waned. To have taken the initiative in the founding of two such institutions as the Ontario Agricultural College and the Dominion Experimental Farms, will cause Sir John Carling to be remembered as the true friend of advanced agriculture in Canada.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee is the Coffee that is all smiles. It is as different from ordinary Coffee, as pan-dried rolled oats are different from oats fed to horses.

Nature lines the Coffee berry with an inner coating to prevent insects destroying the berry while green. This coat is tough, indigestible and bitter with tannin. Ordinary Coffee contains this tough, bitter shell. The Dalton's method is to roast the Coffee by a special process which retains all the richness and flavor, the exquisite bouquet and aroma.

After the Coffee is ground, another special process removes every particle of hull—leaving only the wholesome, healthful heart of the Coffee berry, rich in gastronomic charm.

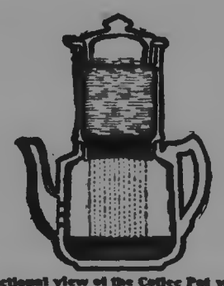
You can drink Dalton's French Drip Coffee for every meal, every day, without fear of Headaches, Indigestion or, any other ill-effects resulting.

But Dalton's French Drip Coffee must be made right to taste right—and that means, without boiling.

The French Drip, or Percolator, Process is the only way to make really good Coffee. This, however, does not mean that you go to the extra expense of buying a costly Percolator.

We have secured sole rights for a French Drip Coffee Pot—one that is reliable, easy to clean, simple in operation. We have tested it for several months and can say that this French Drip Coffee Pot will make Dalton's French Drip Coffee just as it should be made—anyone can use it.

If you like Coffee at all, we know that you will be delighted with Dalton's French Drip Coffee WHEN IT IS PROPERLY PREPARED.



Sectional view of the Coffee Pot we are giving away free.

To insure this, we give you one of these $1.30 French Drip Coffee Pots, absolutely free, with your first order of a tin each of Dalton's MILD and STRONG Coffee at 50c. a tin.

We limit one Coffee Pot to a family and desire that both kinds of our Coffee be bought. This is to your advantage because you cannot tell in advance which you will prefer for regular use.

The MILD is an exquisite blend with a light, yet full, flavor. The STRONG is for those who wish a heavy, full-bodied Coffee and is especially suited for after-dinner Coffee.

These Coffees are not expensive. At 50c. a tin, they are the cheapest good Coffee on the market, because actual tests show that TWO pounds of Dalton's Coffee will make as many cups as THREE pounds of ordinary Coffee—and there is no comparison in quality or flavor.

Get a tin of each at your grocer's, and he will give you, free, one of the Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pots worth $1.30. If, by any chance, he is unable to fill your order, write us and we will see that you are supplied promptly. Sold in 25c. and 50c. tins.

OATS FIVE FEET HIGH

Mr. Alf. Cooper brought in some oats from his farm in Neebing town ship, near Fort William. The oats which are green, stand five feet high and are well headed out with full kernels of grain. Six weeks ago he thought of ploughing it down as useless, but since then it has grown to its present size. He has thirty acres of such oats and his wheat is equally good.

SCIENTIFIC MATING

Millionaire Wants Yale to Teach Doctrine of Race Culture

New York, Aug. 20.—The time has come in the opinion of W. E. D. Stokes when the science of eugenics should be taught at Yale. In a letter to President Hadley, the millionaire suggests that study of race culture and the application of its principles to marriage will lead to the physical and moral betterment of the human race. Mr. Stokes submits that by scientific methods the value of horses, cattle and poultry has increased. "Then why not, he argues, try to improve humanity through similar knowledge? He predicts the day when it will be a public disgrace to be the parents of any but healthy, intelligent, well formed children.

IMPROVING POULTRY

Beaverton Farmers Are Putting Brain into the Industry

Mr. J. Hare, Whitby, has been for the past six weeks devoting his time to the organization of "Co-operative Poultry Circles" in the vicinity of Beaverton. He reports marked success in this new line of effort. One organization, he states, is composed of over forty farmers, who have been receiving since organization three or four cents per dozen more for their eggs than the prevailing market prices. Live poultry is also handled through the organization. This movement is active in other parts of the Province, and undoubtedly promises to very greatly improve the present deplorable condition of the poultry industry.

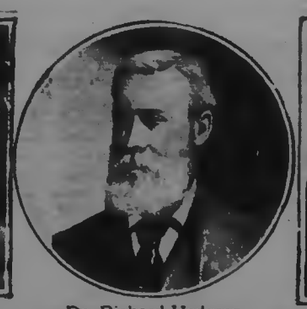
GHOSTS and SPIRITS MADE TO ORDER

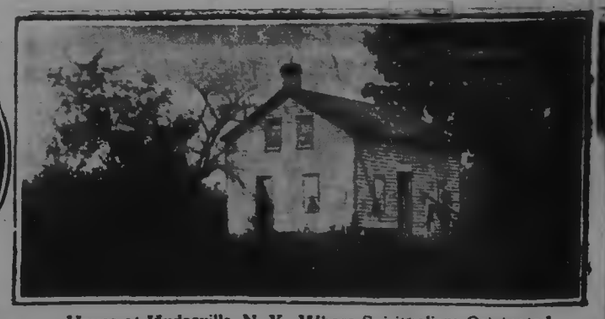
Mr. Joseph F. Rinn, Friend and Critic of Professor Hyslop, Scoffs at Psychic Phenomena and Describes How He Himself Has Reproduced Mediums' Feats by Trickery

Eusapia Paladino

Joseph F. Rinn



Dr. Richard Hodgson



House at Hydesville, N. Y., Where Spiritualism Originated

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

THERE are no ghosts, no psychic phenomena: there is no such thing as telepathy. Such is the iconoclastic statement of Mr Joseph F. Rinn, a New York business man, who is president of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association, and who spends much of his time and no little money in investigating the ways of mediums.

After an experience of more than twenty years he is more than ever convinced that these persons are either conscious or unconscious frauds and that those who believe in them are credulous persons who can easily be deluded or wish to be. Mr. Rinn is very strong in his condemnation of persons of standing in the academic world who lend their support to claims which he insists cannot meet scientific tests.

"What does the college man know that would enable him to detect fraud in spiritualistic manifestations?" he asked. "I should rather take six men from the street, teamsters or common laborers, than as many college professors to get at the real truth behind the medium's performances. By reiteration of what they call facts many gentlemen posing as scientists have led many to believe that some persons have the power to transcend what we call natural law and that these persons have the power to communicate with the dead and to receive messages from them.

"When a man eminent in science tells us of something in his particular sphere, into which no fraud can intrude, and which can be verified under scientific conditions, he is entitled to a respectful hearing, but if he states that on a particular night his cow jumped over the post office his testimony on that point is no more valid that the testimony of other persons. The mere fact that a man is noted in his particular field of research, astronomy, physics or mathematics, should not be considered as presumptive evidence of his ability to see correctly things outside his experience.

"For some years persons justly noted in science have been writing about spiritistic phenomena, and by constant iteration have gathered a following of adherents. In spite of the fact that they have been duped time and again, they continue to pose as qualified investigators.

"Wonderful phenomena demand wonderful evidence in their support, and no such evidence exists, as at no time have mediums produced phenomena under conditions where fraud has been impossible. As an individual, as a member of the Society for Psychical Research, after working jointly with Dr. Hodgson, Professor Hyslop and others, I am convinced that nine-tenths of the so-called evidence of these men of science recorded in the volumes of the Society for Psychical Research is only fit for the waste paper basket. A great part of this evidence consists of stories that John Smith and Mary Jones told of what happened in their families five, ten or twenty years before, with personal embellishments.

Reward Offered for Proof.

"I have knowledge of all the evidence outstanding, and in face of it I stand ready to reward handsomely any one who will produce phenomena contrary to law under conditions where fraud is impossible.

"Many persons believe that the evidence for telepathy has almost proved the case, yet a reputable firm of solicitors in England has publicly offered $5,000 for an authenticated incident. The firm's client had previously endeavored to find one for himself which he could accept, but his search proving unavailing, he had this advertisement placed in the newspapers. No one has yet submitted anything that will meet a practical scientific test.

"The compiling of a large number of stories told by reputable persons is the evidence upon which the Society for Psychical Research largely depends. The ablest members of this society were Edmund Gurney, Frederic Meyers and Frank Podmore, and yet they were deceived. If they can be deceived what are we to think of the evidence submitted by other members?

"Professor Hyslop has assumed the rôle of authority on psychic phenomena in this country and scolds every one who disagrees with his conclusions. He professes to be a competent investigator and says he was converted to spiritualism through Piper. I have only the friendliest for Professor Hyslop; but I must his attitude on this question. In twenty years Mrs. Piper has one contribution to human knowledge, and the greater number of those who have witnessed her phenomena have gone away convinced. According to her manner of producing phenomena, a spirit takes her hand and writes. Questions are asked of the hand. Dr. Hodgson is alleged to be the spirit now controlling her. Yet she made Dr. Hodgson recognize Professor Stanley Hall as a friend simply because she thought from something he had said that he was an intimate of Dr. Hodgson's, when, as a matter of fact, they had never met. Also when Mrs. Piper went to England Dr. Hodgson's spirit failed to recognise his friends unless Mrs. Piper knew that they were his friends.

Unable to Read Letter.

"I have a letter from Hodgson which I received a few days before his death, but Mrs. Piper is unable to tell me one word that is in that letter. Mrs. Piper never told anything that was not known to some living person, although in her sittings, which are conducted in the most unsatisfactory manner, she pumps visitors and fishes for information. Although Mrs. Piper goes into a trance, she is keenly alive to all that goes on about her.

"Professor Hyslop contends that only physicians and psychologists are proper persons to investigate the phenomena of mediums. Now, they are much less likely to perceive and understand the frauds perpetrated by mediums than other classes of individuals. Moreover, the testimony of no person with a financial interest in a medium should be accepted.

"It was because Dr. Hodgson's honesty was unassailable that so much of Mrs. Piper's testimony has been accepted, as Professor Hyslop acknowledged to me. But is it scientific to permit the honesty or dishonesty of one man to affect phenomena which are alleged to transcend natural laws? Most of these learned persons who are interested in the spiritistic theory are seeking to prove the existence of a force and all their testimony is in its favor. The test of a medium should be made by some one able to detect trickery, which the eminent college professors are not.

"Now, when I helped to expose Mme. Eusabia Palladino I had associated with me a man who had had experience as a public medium, a manufacturer of magic toys and an expert conjurer. Of course for the occasion we were all 'professors.' They were what she was accustomed to and she knew that she could fool them. We got her in a private house, and a Columbia College young man dressed in the same color as the carpet crawled in at a cue from our confederates, and under cover of the noise of their ejaculations and comments got under her chair, so that we could watch, and touch if we wanted to, her feet. We caught her tipping and raising the table and I can do that or any of her tricks just as well as she did them. No wonder she would not submit to the public test, although she had promised to do so."

Mr. Rinn gave an exhibition of his "mediumistic powers" in a public hall recently, including in his répertoire all the familiar manifestations of the regular mediums which so impress and baffle the uninitiated, yet it was given in full daylight and with no properties. Mr. Rinn fooled his audience to the top of their bent, then explained how easily he had fooled them, and was bitterly reproached by believing spiritualists for his exposure, which was taken as an attack.

Questions were passed up to the platform and as Mr. Rinn answered them, persons in various parts of the house acknowledged that they were their queries. How did he do it? As he stood apparently reading the question he was about to answer he was really reading the next one, always keeping one ahead. That made it easy.

"Mary, mother says, 'Believe and all will be well.'

"'John, do not buy the mining stock: it is too dangerous. Father.'"

Of course, Mr. Rinn really read the John question when he was supposed to be reading Mary's question. To begin with, he had to have a question of his own providing whose answer he knew; after that it was easy.

With a sealed paper he dealt in an ingenious way. A person in the audience had written the name of a patriot and statesman. Mr. Rinn agreed to tell who it was. He flourished the envelope about, put it upon the table, pressed it against his forehead, and, placing it upon the table again, discoursed on heroes. Meanwhile he had carelessly rubbed a little non-odorous alcohol over the envelope and when he took it up was able to announce the name of Abraham Lincoln.

How Slate Writing Can Be Done.

"Slate writing has converted more persons to spiritistic belief than any other one thing," said Mr. Rinn. "Of course I can do the slate writing act. Here is a slate and here is a pencil. I write upon it just to show the pencil is all right, then I take a sponge and rub out what I have written. There is a clean slate. I hold it in my hand and talk. I press it to my breast and talk. Always keep talking—that is three-fourths of the battle. Presently I open the slate at the psychological moment and, behold, a message! The pencil was slate at one end, nitrate of silver at the other. While I talked I had turned it and no one noticed which end I used.

"The sponge which I rubbed over the slate was dampened with acid. The warmth of my body did the rest. There was the wonderful message from the spirit world.

"A man has a double slate wrapped in paper. Could I read the message within? I said I would try. This act required a confederate. I gave my friend the cue. Then I talked, passing the slates about the head of the man who had presented them and who sat conveniently within reach of my confederate. In order to get the influence of the man's personality I placed the slates against his forehead, front and back, on his chest, shoulders and back, always talking. At one of the moments that I touched his back my confederate exchanged slates. By the time I had finished my task he had exchanged slates again and I had the message."

Mr. Rinn was able to accede to the request to write on a slate while his hands were tied. It was placed on the floor before him, and while talking to the audience about the difficulty of getting the message he got one of his feet out of a slipper, and, with a pencil fastened under his toe wrote upon the slate. A few moments later he was standing, both feet in his slippers, his hands still tied and the message on the slate.

Mr. Rinn's crowning achievement was a representation of a medium in the hands of an impartial committee. He was searched, most of his clothing removed and he was tied in a chair. The committee sat about six feet from him. They were blindfolded to simulate the darkness in which the ordinary sitting takes place, and were instructed to tell what they felt or heard in order that a stenographer might make a record of it. Soon there were remarks from one and another.

"Some one slapped my hand."

"One touched my forehead."

"There is some one sitting on my lap!"

"Oh, he is in his chair on my knee; he leans against my face and moans."

"He is walking on my knees, now on my shoulders and my head. I can feel the pressure of his slippers!"

Fooling His Audience.

"They did feel all these things," said Mr. Rinn. "In spite of the search, as it was as thorough as any committee ever makes, I had concealed about me a penknife, a piece of tape, an electric torch and a black bag which I put over my head and which came well down over my body. With this protection I could read the messages that had been passed up to me, holding them under the electric light. Then I cut the tape with which I was bound and performed spirit antics with my committee. I touched their hands, their knees, their heads. I placed my chair on their laps and leaned my head against theirs. When this was over I tied myself in my chair again and was ready to be examined by my committee. If I had desired and had had time I could have produced hands, made prints of hands or faces in clay or could have done any of the things that the mediums usually do."

It all sounds so easy and so simple when Mr. Rinn tells how it is done that one is a little ashamed of ever having been impressed with apparent spiritistic or psychic phenomena.

In all the manifestations that have taken place since the days of the Fox sisters, Mr. Rinn says, nothing new has been developed. Each so-called phenomenon is only a variation of some old one and is as easily explicable. Only those persist in believing that it is supernatural or in contravention of natural law who do not wish to have their eyes opened to the truth. People are going about looking for psychic wonders and they find them.

Blind, She Teaches the Sightless to Sew and Cook.

THERE is a place in New York where the blind actually lead the blind, and it is through the medium of blind teachers that sightless girls and women are taught many useful things incident to everyday life. At the New York Association for the Blind, No. 118 East Fifty-ninth street, this mode of instruction has passed through the experimental stage and is now established as a very important branch of the work of bringing light into the lives of the sightless.

It was at the instance of Miss Winifred Holt, who devotes much time and attention to the welfare of those who seem doomed to live in darkness, that the German method of home instruction of the blind, by the blind, was introduced. When the work was begun some three years ago, there was but one teacher; now there are four, and with the beginning of the new year more names will be added to the list.

One of the most accomplished of the teachers is Miss Alta de Frances. She has been with the association from the time it began its work. She has been blind nearly all her life, but has also been ambitious, and now her chief work is to lead the blind and teach them to work for themselves. There is little she cannot do that comes within the power of the average person who can see.

"You do not know," said Miss de Frances, as she seated herself in an up town car, for she had asked me to accompany her in a round of calls, "you do not know what a wonderful benefit this home instruction is proving to many blind girls and women. Few persons realize the difficulties that must be overcome before a blind woman learns to do things that will make her even slightly helpful.

"Thousands of persons who have lost their sight or who were born blind have been nearly helpless all their lives because they have been unable to obtain instruction. Of course there are the exceptions, women and men who have persevered and learned things by themselves, but the average person without sight needs instruction. Many who are poor cannot afford to go to the schools, even the car fare is too much for them, and they cannot obtain a guide because all of their people are working. So we reach the women in their homes, teach them the essential things of home making and create a happiness about them of which they never even dreamed.

"Frequently I have been asked why it was more satisfactory to the blind person to receive instruction from one who could not see than from one who could. The sightless teacher has a keener sympathy with the pupil. No matter how sweet of disposition, how gentle or earnest one who has her sight may be, there are times when she becomes impatient, for it is nerve wearing work for one who has her sight to teach another who is blind.

"Everything must be recognized by touch, scent or sound. The blind teacher guides the pupil's hands and sometimes makes her understand with a touch things that it would take another person days to teach in words."

"Here we are," said a cheerful young woman, who acts as guide for Miss de Frances, and with just the slightest possible hesitation this very capable blind teacher stepped from the car.

We stopped in front of a tenement; it was the home of those not over supplied with this world's goods. Up three flights, through dark halls Miss de Frances guided herself by the railing of the stairs and travelled far more easily than we who tried to see. In response to the guide's knock, the door opened and a young girl, very slender and white, stood before us.

"Oh," she cried, as she heard her teacher's voice, "I am so glad you are here. I do so want to show you what I have accomplished."

At first, when she realized that a stranger was present, she was a bit abashed, but soon she began to act naturally again.

"Now I want to show you my bed. I want you to see how nicely it is made." She led the way into a little dark bed-room, and with her quickly moving hands she "showed" Miss de Frances the bed, and with her delicate touch Miss de Frances "saw" how well it had been made.

Here was a girl of nineteen, who until a year before had never received instruction. She had always been blind. As a result she sat all day in her chair, afraid almost to move, for she had no one from babyhood up, to give her self confidence. Alone all day, she became melancholy, and there were fears that her mind would give way when Miss de Frances was sent to her and began the work of instruction. At present she is a very capable little housekeeper and is beginning to learn how to sew.

It was a sewing lesson that Miss de Frances had come to give. Needlework had not before been taken up, for the girl had been sitting nearly all her life, and what she needed

The blind teacher and pupil seated themselves side by side, and the pupil's hands travelling quickly to the basket on the table she pulled out a towel that was to be hemmed. Now turning a hem is a very simple matter for one who can see, but here was a young woman who must use her fingers instead of her eyes, and, laying her fingers delicately on those of her teacher, and following each movement of them, she was learning how to turn a hem and gauge the depth of it. It looked exactly as though four hands were turning the hem, but the second pair only followed the first.

Half of the hem was turned in this way and then the towel was handed to the beginner. She worked hesitatingly for a few inches, then she lost her way, and Miss de Frances, with just the slightest corrective touch imaginable, set her right again. The teacher's fingers had been constantly following those of the pupil, not guiding, but "watching," and when the mistake was made the little movement of correction was slight but effective.

With a touch the girl was taught the proper length of a stitch in the hems and how far apart they should set, also the right direction in which to slant the needle for a proper hemming stitch. It is wonderful to watch a blind woman giving instruction to another who cannot see. Few words are spoken, few are necessary. Instruction is given through the understanding of the touch, rather than words.

"It is by no means a simple matter to teach some women how to sew," said Miss de Frances. "I have tried to teach some women even how to baste and it has taken months. That is where our patience comes in, for every blind person has found many things that it has seemed almost impossible for her to learn how to do. We all have a wonderful sympathy and patience with each other."

The blind pupil was left at a hem to work with for her new lesson and she was delighted and only too willing to undertake something new. In the house where the next lesson was to be given, some blocks away, Miss de Frances called a cheery "good morning" through the half open door of a small apartment.

Here we found a woman of about forty-two sitting by the window, running her fingers over the raised characters of a book printed for the blind. Her face became radiant with smiles as she heard her teacher's voice.

A lesson in bed making was to be given in this home. The woman had attended one of the schools for the blind, but there she had learned only how to read and sew, and now she was to be taught those things that make every real woman happy, she was to learn the art of home making.

The bed clothes lay across the back of a chair and picking up one of the sheets Miss de Frances ran her hands down one side. There was no hem, evidently this was not the top. Her hands travelled down the side of the sheet, the pupil following the teacher. The narrow hem was found. That was one hem. Feeling the bed, Miss de Frances discovered which was the head and which the foot, then, standing near the middle of the front side, she showed the blind woman exactly how to toss the sheet to make it come pretty

"Perhaps it seems strange to you," said the woman, turning to me, "that I do not know how to make a bed. I have tried time and again by myself, but it has always failed. Now that I am learning the right way to go about it it seems very simple, but at first I was almost in tears more than once."

As the bed making proceeded four hands at once patted and smoothed and tucked away at the clothes. At last the bed was made and there was not a wrinkle to be seen in it. Also it had been made in a remarkably short time. Another one was still unmade, and the pupil tried to accomplish this by herself. She did well, but not as well as the teacher, and of course a great deal more time was necessary.

This woman had also learned how to bake. She showed us some cake of which many a housewife not so afflicted would be proud.

"You see," she said, "Miss de Frances has taught me how to cook. When a blind person learns this she must work through the senses of feeling, taste and smell."

"That is so," said the teacher. "For instance, we know when a cake is of right consistency by the way it feels when we stir the batter. When a blind person who is alert has received instruction in making half a dozen cakes she begins to realize just when it is right. When the cake is taken from the oven it is not by sticking it with a straw that she finds out whether or not it is done, but by the sense of smell. This manner of finding out whether a cake is baked or not would never occur to one who could see, but it is most satisfactory to the blind.

"There is a blind woman in New York who keeps house for twelve boarders, does her cooking and the sewing for her two daughters, also the washing and ironing. This woman lost her sight a number of years ago. She has had to learn how to do all these things without the use of her eyes rather late in life, but she began to study conscientiously and of her own accord had a blind person come to her home and give her instructions.

"There are numerous blind women in New York who, through this instruction by the blind teachers in their homes, have become capable of taking care of their apartments, of their children, and of all sorts of domestic affairs. There are even women who can select meat almost better than many with their sight. They are taught this in their homes, the marketing first being done for them and brought home; then they are taught the correct shape of certain cuts and also their names.

"It is far more difficult to deceive a blind person who has once learned how to shop than it is the woman who can see. The number of blind women and girls who are becoming capable and almost self-dependent is on the increase. And their homes, that were once no more than dark prison houses to them, are being filled with light and happiness."

PAYING A CHURCH DEBT IN UGANDA.

THE capital of Uganda has always centred round the native king, and formerly it was the custom for each new king to take up his abode on a different hill from that upon which his predecessor had held court.

Some years ago a "cathedral" was built upon the site of the present capital. Borup, the engineer missionary, who taught the Baganda to make bricks, instructed the young men in carpentering and other handicrafts, and superintended this, their first building operation on a large scale.

The building of the cathedral involved a considerable drain upon the resources of the church, and a large debt remained to be paid. After the regular consecration service one year the offering was taken up to meet this debt. A little army of men was employed, going to and fro with large bags and cloths. They returned to the chancel heavily laden with strings of cowrie shells, besides the coinage introduced with British rule.

The English members of the congregation could not repress their smiles when the first chicken was solemnly carried up the aisle and deposited at the foot of the table, followed almost immediately by a couple of goats that showed a marked objection to being dragged and removed by a side door.

It then appeared that contributions were flowing in, not only from the congregation proper, but from the yet greater "crowd" which had failed to gain admission and thronged round the building outside all through the service. Load after load of offerings came in through the various doors, and many were the gifts in kind that did not appear within. Others arrived too late for the occasion, and the collection continued to grow for days afterward. The result more than wiped out the debt.

THE SAFE COUGH SYRUP.

Because coughs and colds are common property, and cough medicines are numerous and cheap, many people dose themselves with stuff which the family physician would justly and unsparingly condemn.

NA-DRU-CO Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne

on the other hand, is a remedy which is compounded by expert chemists and approved by physicians. We will gladly send to your physician or druggist, on request, a list of its ingredients.

WAS TROUBLED WITH

Weakness and Palpitation OF THE HEART.

Through one cause or another a large majority of people are troubled, more or less, with some form of heart trouble.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart, but when it starts to beat irregularly or intermittently, palpitate and throb, skip beats, beats fast for a time, then so slow as to seem almost to stop, then it causes great anxiety and alarm.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills can and will give prompt and permanent relief.

They do this by their restorative influence on every organ and tissue of the body.

Mrs. John J. Downey, New Glasgow, N.S., writes—"Just a few lines to let you know what your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I was troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart, would have severe choking spells, and could scarcely lie down at all. I tried many remedies, but got none to answer my case like your Pills. I can recommend them highly to all having heart or nerve troubles."

Sulphur is a Natural Element of the Hair

When there is not a sufficient amount of sulphur in the hair, it loses its life, color and strength, turns gray, and falls out. There are many forms of sulphur, but only one kind that is suitable for treatment of the hair and scalp, and that is the kind used in preparing WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY.

We Have the Secret, and We Give You the Benefit of It at an Exceedingly Low Price

BALDNESS CURED

For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin, until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly, until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is now fairly covered with hair, and it keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The 260 cotton mill strikers at Magog, Que., went back to work yesterday at the old wage, and the mills are running full blast again.

Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson will be placed on trial at Boston on Jan. 15, charged with the murder of Miss Avis Linnell, his former sweetheart.

The military dirigible balloon Adjutant Beau beat the world's altitude record for dirigibles yesterday at Paris by ascending to a height of just over 7,086 feet.

The officers of the Montreal garrison are giving a dinner on Dec. 20, in the Windsor Hotel, to Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence.

An Englishman named Groves leaped from a train running 45 miles an hour near Vankleek Hill yesterday. He was picked up with only a slight scratch on his face.

Premier Borden tendered Rt. Hon. James Bryce a luncheon at the Rideau Club yesterday afternoon, when the British Ambassador met members of the new Cabinet.

Desperate from starvation, Edward Roberts, aged 26, ex-convict from the Kingston Penitentiary, was caught burglarizing at Watertown, N.Y. He was discharged last Wednesday after completing a five-year term.

Controller W. E. Brown of Ottawa has issued a writ for unstated damages for alleged defamation of character against J. F. Orde, K.C. The action arises out of a meeting of the Civic Improvement League at which the lawyer criticized Brown's appointment to the Board of Control.

Hebert Case Goes On.

Montreal, Dec. 7.—The Hebert marriage annulment case entered upon a new phrase Tuesday afternoon, when Mr. George V. Cousins, acting in the interests of Mrs. Hebert, entered an inscription for final judgment ex parte on the opposition entered against the ruling of Mr. Justice Laurendeau some months ago. The opposition asks that the judgment be definitely nullified and set aside; that the marriage contracted before Rev. Mr. Timberlake be declared legal and valid, and that the court ruling annulling it be adjudged unfounded in law.

It is promised that other developments will follow closely upon the presentation of the inscription, it being stated unofficially that the next step in the proceedings will take the form of an attack on the validity of the ecclesiastical decree itself, whereby the marriage was declared null and of no effect, whilst an action for damages against the ecclesiastical court, which promulgated the decree, is also spoken of as a possibility.

Madame Hebert's counsel says:

"We claim that the desistment of the husband has not the effect of annulling the judgment in so far as that judgment denied the status of wife to Dame Hebert. This can be brought about only by a final judgment on the opposition now asked for, and which should prove once and for all the validity of the marriage."

Will Force It Through.

London, Dec. 7.—Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon that the Government would use all the constitutional means at its disposal to pass a home rule bill for Ireland during the lifetime of the present Parliament.

Mr. Asquith declared this in reply to a question from William O'Brien, member for Cork city, who expressed concern at a recent report that Mr. Asquith was trying to get the House of Lords to throw out the home rule bill when it reaches the Upper House.

The Premier by his announcement yesterday means that he undertakes to force the home rule bill through three consecutive sessions if necessary, thus making it become effective in spite of the opposition of the peers.

Men Go Back.

Berlin, Dec. 7.—The lockout of metal workers which began on Nov. 30 and affected between 50,000 and 60,000 men ceased yesterday. A majority of the strikers were opposed to a compromise between the masters and men, which was drawn up on Tuesday, but as a technical ruling of the trade unions requires a two-thirds' majority to reject compromise proposals and to refuse to return to work, and this majority was not obtained, the lockout has come to an end.

Turks Attack Bulgarians.

Constantinople, Dec. 7.—Serious rioting has taken place at Istib, a town in European Turkey, about 90 miles north of Saloniki, consequent on the bomb outrage in a mosque there on Dec. 4, when 12 persons were killed and 20 wounded.

The Turks in revenge attacked the Bulgarians, whom they accused of being the perpetrators of the outrage, killing 14 and wounding 137 of them in the affray.

CAUGHT A BAD COLD.

DEVELOPED BRONCHITIS. SHE COULD HARDLY SPEAK.

Bronchitis begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellow color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to consumption.

Mrs. Edward Travers, Campbellton, N.B., writes:—"I thought it my duty to write and let you know what your wonderful medicine has done for me. I caught a very bad cold which developed into bronchitis. I was so choked up I could hardly breathe. I tried many medicines but they did me no good, and I had almost given up in despair. A friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, so I got a bottle and felt much better, and by the time I had taken four I was completely cured and I can assure you I cannot say too much in its praise, as it is all you claim for it, and more."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 6.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the offerings to-day were 380 cattle, 1200 sheep and lambs, 1250 hogs and 100 calves. The tone of the market for cattle was steady, but as there were no choice steers offered, the top price realised was $5.75 per 100 pounds.

The supply was ample to fill all requirements, as butchers and packers in cases have still large stocks on hand, and, as the weather has turned mild again, they do not care to increase their stocks any more at the present. Consequently the demand for top grades was only fair, while the trade in common and inferior cattle was slow, and the market on the whole was quiet.

A good trade was done in sheep and lambs, and, as the supply was not in excess of the demand, a firm feeling prevailed in the market. The demand was principally for lambs, and some choice lots sold as high as $6 per 100 pounds. The demand for calves was good, and prices for good to choice stock were higher.

At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the offerings of live stock were 800 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 1,200 hogs and 100 calves. The trade in cattle was quiet, but the demand for other lines was fair, and prices show no change, selected lots of hogs selling at $6.50 to $6.75 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $5 to $5.10; do., medium, $4.50 to $4.60; do., common, $3.75 to $3.90; canners, $2 to $2.25; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $5.25 to $5.50; do., medium, $4.50 to $5; do., bulls, $3.75 to $4.25; milkers, choice, each, $75; do., common and medium, each, $50 to $60; springers, $30 to $60.

Sheldon In Good Spirits.

Montreal, Dec. 7.—Chas. D. Sheldon, the financial wizard, who is doing time in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, for doing the public out of a million or so, was called as a witness yesterday in the case taken by the curators to recover money he paid in dividends the last day the office was open.

He was the same old Sheldon with the ministerial air, the smile and the out-stretched hand. His health is good, "as," he said, with a laugh, "prison has its good points as well as its bad ones."

He was asked what his plans were for the future. "Well, if the people of Montreal will only have a little more faith in me when I get out I could pay back——" and then the guards took a hand in the conversation.

Denial By Belcourt.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—Senator N. A. Belcourt writes to The Ottawa Journal as follows:

"My attention has been called to the statement made by J. U. Vincent at the Conservative meeting held in St. Ann's Hall, that the French-Canadian Educational Association, its officers, Liberals, had laid down the principle that the French should always vote for one of their own.

"As president of the association, I deny categorically and emphatically that the association has ever laid down such a principle, and I may add that the association has never preached or practiced such a narrow, bigoted and foolish course."

Passengers All Safe.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 7.—Wireless communication has at last been established with the United Fruit Co.'s vessels for the safety of whose 600 passengers much alarm was felt.

A Chance to Reply.

Washington, Dec. 7.—J. D. Rockefeller and Rev. Fred D. Gates, manager of Mr Rockefeller's charities, were yesterday invited by Chairman Stanley of the House Steel Trust Investigating Committee to appear before the committee next Monday, if they care to do so, to reply to the charges by the Merritt brothers, of Minnesota, concerning the $20,000,000 Mesaba ore properties in Minnesota.

U. S. Packers Steal March.

London, Eng., Dec. 7.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The reported purchase of Nelson & Co.'s Argentine meat plant by Armour & Co. for two and a half million dollars is generally credited here and has filled English salesmen with some apprehension as they foresee the complete manipulation of British transatlantic importing trade by American interests to the detriment of Canada and England alike.

CANADA'S PRODUCTION OF MEAT IS NOT KEEPING UP WITH THE GROWING DEMAND

Striking Report Presented to Parliament This Afternoon by Dr. J. G. Rutherford, Veterinary Inspector of Department of Agriculture.

A SERIOUS SITUATION

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, DEC. 7.— That Canada's production of meat is not keeping up with the growing demand, that its meat export trade is diminishing and bids fair to disappear altogether, and that the general situation is very serious for Canada. These are the features of the report to parliament, published to-day by Dr. J. G. Rutherford, veterinary inspector general of the Department of Agriculture. Dr. Rutherford says the situation has changed materially during the last ten years.

There is now no anxiety as to the provision of a market for Canadian cattle; indeed, Canada's importations of meat, both fresh and canned, have increased tremendously, hence the remarkable increase in Canada's cost of living. He explains that the great population in Western Canada is not taking to mixed farming and probably will not take to it, till the exhaustion of the fertility in the land compels them to. Also the continued augmentation of urban population, due to commercial and industrial activity, serves to increase the consuming population, while decreasing the producing.

Xmas Gifts At F. Clarke & Son's

The spirit of Christmas is now beginning to show itself, and the best evidence of that fact is the handsomely and beautifully stocked jewellery store of Clarke & Son, corner of Brock and George Streets. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to visit this store and enjoy the privilege of examining the latest and best in the jewellery line.

These goods represent the highest type of all that is artistic and beautiful. Diamonds are a specialty. The finest Kimberley and Youger diamonds, in white and blue, etc., just the article for a magnificent gift. How about that gift for your gentleman friend? You are at a loss to know what to buy. Something nice and yet not expensive. A glance through the store of Clarke & Son suggests the kind of presents everyone will be glad to receive, and yet they need not necessarily be expensive. Gold cuff links, plain pattern, engraved free. Gold-handled umbrellas, sterling cigarette case, English engraved pattern, gold fobs. These are merely a few of the hundreds of gifts you might give him, and they wish to especially emphasize the fact that the engraving is done entirely free. It is a decided advance in anything ever attempted in a local store, and the prices emphasize the advantage of doing your buying at home.

The following are a few of the stones which form a part of the Christmas stock—Rubies, sardonyx, sapphire, opals, topaz, turquoise, garnet, amethyst, blood stone, diamonds, emeralds, agates, and pearls. Diamonds and pearls are a specialty.

The interior of their store would do credit to any Diamond Hall. The aim of the proprietor is to so conduct the business that strangers will become customers and customers become friends. This will be the case because of the measure of satisfaction always given and the determination to sell only reliable goods at fair prices.

The very genuineness of the quality of the goods is in line with the Christmas spirit, and in the experience of the firm, they have never before been in a position to offer such splendid goods for the money. If you want jewellery that is worth all you pay for it, call at the store of Clark & Son and buy your gifts. It is impossible for you to be dissatisfied. Here is a list of some of the lines which have been newly stocked especially for the Christmas trade: Brass and copper goods, from the best firms in Europe; cut glass, and sterling silver dressing cases; Sheffield flat ware, fancy china ware, clocks and watches, suitable for presents; silver table ware, gold rings of all descriptions and prices; chatelaines, vases, bracelets, and suitable gifts for old and young of both sexes. Call in and see the goods. You don't have to buy, but when you see the goods, you are certain to make a purchase. Corner of George and Brock Streets.

The Spoilsman's Axe Falls With Several Dull Thuds

The Borden Government has nobly begun the work of civil service reform—"purifying the service." It has made a beginning in West Peterborough, which represents a condition no doubt that prevails throughout the whole Dominion.

Only the application of the doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils," can justify some of the dismissals that are announced in the local government newspapers. In regard to filling the vacancy in the Inland Revenue office, that is a natural, and under party government, a defensible action. The position was vacant, Mr. Phelan has always been an active partizan, and the Government naturally filled an office at their disposal by appointing a supporter. Something similar applies to the case of Mr. Swanson, who resigned the first of December.

But the other dismissals can only be justified on the principle that the public service belongs to the party heeler—that party service, not efficiency, is to be the standard of protection of the public interests. It is evident that thirst for the spoils of office excused several of the dismissals, and that this thirst took a particularly cruel and heartless form in the case of Mr. John Cronin, who could not be allowed to keep his place and enjoy its little remuneration till spring, but his head must be cut off at the beginning of winter, and his place given to a man in the prime of life, who goes under pay, with no duties to perform, till the opening of navigation in the spring.

In the case of Mr. Clarry, Trent Canal Accountant, it was generally known that he intended going into something else in the spring. But his place was wanted, and "for cause"—this was the cause—he was summarily dismissed to make place for a comparatively new figure in the heeler department, who was preferred over others who were natives of the riding, and had worked longer and harder for the party, and were born and raised in the county.

Mr. Burnham's organ says the dismissals were made to "purify the civil service"—by substituting one offensive partizan for another—that's the party policy. If that is the party policy, why don't Mr. Burnham and Mr. Peck begin at home and send adrift Mr. Joseph Stewart, the most offensive partizan that has ever swaggered in a combination of rank partizanship and official incapacity, in Peterborough

Mr. Burnham, who assumes "full responsibility," says that investigation of the charge of partizanship will be granted on demand. That is Jedburg justice—hanging a man first and trying him afterwards. It is not British justice and fair play; but what is that to Mr. Burnham, who is the thick and thin supporter of a Government that is controlled by an element that has no use for British fair play or anything British; either Flag, or Throne, or Navy, or Empire—that "has had enough of England and the English"?

The application of the spoils system will not "purify"—the cant of it—but bedevil, the civil service. Who that knows the men will say that the service is "purified" by substituting Benjamin McGill for "Daddy" Taylor?

The plea of "purifying" the service is only a thin excuse, as shown by the appointments made, yielding to the pressure of party heelers at the expense of the deserving. If the desire was to purify the service, and even reward party service, selections should be made, not of new-comers, but of men of service who have for a life time fought the battles of the party. In such a game as the spoils system it is not the deserving man but the man of cheek that gets the reward.

Mr. Borden has preached civil service reform in Opposition, but denies it when in office. He has the power to do something. He would not have reciprocity with the United States, but he adopts the most villainous United States doctrine, that to the victors belong the spoils. This is not the only thing that he has disappointed his friends in. The people of Ontario gave him 70 of a majority on issues and principles, every one of which Mr. Borden has outraged in the formation of his Government and in the lines of his policy; and continued support of the betrayer of his party, in these regards, by the party he has "thrown down" in Ontario, is "offensive partizanship," full of peril to national interests.

Commercial Cable Co. Makes An Announcement In Regard To Rates

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., DEC. 7.—Geo. C. Wardo, Vice President and General Manager of the Commercial Cable Company, on being asked in regard to the cut in the cable rates, announced by the Western Union Telegraph Co., said: "There are four reductions involved, as follows:

1.—A week-end letter to be received Saturday and delivered the following Tuesday. This will involve Sunday work. We prefer to give our cable operators a rest on Sunday. We confine our Sunday business to public necessity, like Sunday railroad trains. We shall not adopt it. There is no demand for a service of this kind.

2 A newspaper rate of five cents a word. This is a heavy cut of fifty per cent. The purpose is obvious. We think the spectre at Washington is responsible for it. We shall make the same cut.

3. A deferred cable letter. This is to be delivered two days after it is handed in. We shall not adopt it, so long as it remains deferred. Ours is not a deferred company. Ninety-nine per cent of the cablegrams call for immediate delivery. Here, too, there is public demand for such service.

4 Plain language cablegrams at half rates. This is not a Western Union move. It was proposed by the Postmaster General of Great Britain over two years ago. He communicated with the Commercial

PLANS FOR BRIDGE WILL BE CHANGED

Board of Works Took Up the Matter With Mr. Larmonth Last Night—Aldermen Figure That Project is Too Expensive and an Effort Will be Made to Arrange for Cheaper Bridge.

At a meeting of the Board of Works held last night, the matter of the roadway over the Auburn Bridge came up. The City Engineer reported that the proposed roadway, the plan of which was shown on the blue print presented, was only 13 feet wide, and when the street car line was laid across, would not be wide enough to allow two vehicles to pass beside a street car. It simply meant that when two vehciles were passing one would have to turn out on the street car line. Further ,a foot way or sidewalk was not provided for. The City Engineer did not think that $18,000 or $19,000 was an excessive amount for the construction, as the piers would have to be extended and other great changes made.

"I think if it was 10 feet wide, it would be alright. We do not want any extra cost, and besides we are not going to be at the expense of a street car road bed across," said Mayor Morrow.

The Board in general, seemed to have the same idea. The Mayor further stated that perhaps there would be room on the present structure provided for, but he was informed by Mr. Larmonth, who was present, that unless the dam was extended beyond the original plans, there would not be room for a 12 foot drive.

Mr. Larmonth said that a 20 foot drive was what he was figuring on, at the same time contemplating, in the course of a year or so, putting a deck on the dam for the street car line. He advised, however, that this deck was included in the $19,000 estimate he had made the city.

The project seemed too expensive in the eyes of the Board, so Mr. Larmonth was asked to furnish an estimate of a 16 foot structure. This will be done at once.

Mr. Larmonth stated that they expected some day to have the cars running across this bridge, but it would not likely take place for a few years, and in the mean time, the city could use, the bridge until the line was put across. The Board thought that this was not a very satisfatcory way of doing business, so no action will be taken until the 16 foot estimate is presented by Mr. Larmonth.

Communications.

The Bell Telephone Co's application to erect nine more poles, was granted.

From Mr. W. H. Metcalfe, stating that his premises were flooded at certain times of the year, and asked that a sewer be installed to the corner of Stewart and Wolfe streets. The matter was left over until next year.

From the Peterborough Radial R'y Co., asking permission to erect a little house over the levers at the G. T. R., Lock street crossing. This was granted and a rental of $1.00 per year will be charged. An agreement will also be made, whereby the Company will remove the structure, whenever the city requests.

From Mr. Willis Chipman, requesting that he be paid $800 on account, of his services rendered as Consulting Engineer, together with Mr. Perdue, the Resident Engineer. This was granted.

Ald. Metheral, chairman, reported that the south end sewer was progressing rapidly, and would be completed in the course of three weeks or so. The total cost will be about $26,744.26.

Other Business.

The condition of the sidewalk on Hunter street, at the Quaker Oats Co's crossing, came up, and on motion of Ald. Duncan, seconded by Ald. Brown, the Quaker Oats Co. will be asked to relay the portion of the walk torn up for the crossing structure, that is to put it in a passable condition.

The Board was authorized to purchase stone for street purposes for the coming year, and the chairman, Ald. Metheral, was authorized to advertise for tenders, on motion of the Mayor, seconded by Ald. Buller. Then Ald. Buller moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the City Clerk be asked to write the Hastings quarries and get quotations on crushed stone.

Will Stop Fast Driving on Bridge.

Ald. Duncan drew to the attention of the Board the fact that when the Hunter street bridge was being repaired, the sign for fast driving was removed and had not been replaced, with the result that people were driving fast over the bridge every day. Another sign will be placed there immediately and a fine of $20 imposed for any violation.

The City Engineer reported that the old stationary stone crusher was badly out of repair, and would have to be fixed over before it was used. The matter was left with the chairman and the Engineer.

Ald. Brown asked that a sidewalk of some description be put on the south side of Bolivar street, at the west end of the city. A temporary board walk will be built.

There were present at the meeting, Ald. Metheral, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Alds. Duncan, Brown, Bradburn, Anderson, Buller, Graham and Street Commissioner Evans.

As the Manufacturers' committee met at the close of the Board session, some of the members were present at the Board meeting.

LOW HAS RESIGNED

Member of Parliament For South Renfrew Has Given up His Seat so as to Make Way For Hon. G. P. Graham

ACCORDING TO AGREEMENT

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, ONT., DEC. 7.—THOS. A. Low, M.P. for South Renfrew, has forwarded his resignation to the speaker of the House of Commons in conformity with the agreement made between the two political parties in South Renfrew, by which T. W. McGarry was given an election by acclamation to the Legislature, on understanding that Hon. G. P. Graham wouldn't be allowed to be elected by acclamation to the Commons. It is true, the Conservative managers in Ottawa have repudiated the arrangement ,but the Conservative executive of the riding has pledged its word. In any case the speaker will this afternoon inform the House that he has issued his warrant for a new election.

WILL GIVE NO INFORMATION

NO FRIEND OF THE MASSES.

Hon. Mr. Morine, lived long enough in Newfoundalnd to qualify him as a member of the cod-fish aristocracy. He comes out flat-footed as the advocate of the classes, as against the masses. The working men don't need any compensation law. All they need is to go down in their pockets for $5 and buy an accident insurance policy and fight the matter of collection out with a wealthy corporation. The working men don't know what they want anyway. They dont' want a compensation act ;they are better without it, and by refraining from asking for it they will prevent embarrassment to Sir James Whitney, the friend of the privileged classes, both by political affiliation and training and inclination and practice.

A BROKEN PROMISE.

Northern Ontario has room for a population of two millions, yet for six or seven years the Whitney government has utterly neglected to settle or develop this territory and bring into effect a big and profitable trade between Old and New Ontario. All Sir James Whitney has done in regards to the tremendous agricultural possibilities of the great clay belt has been—and that directly contrary to a specific promise—to lock up two million acres in the hands of a railway to be held while sure rounding settlement makes a mine rich as the Cobalt. This two million acres means twenty thousand 100-acre farms, given away to a railway by a premier, who solemnly pledged his word, that no land grants would be made to railways.

SEVERAL THINGS LACKING.

A summary of the indictments of neglect and inefficiency against the Whitney government, includes the matters of Public school reform; Bilingual school reform; development of New Ontario; License Law administration; sleep over Hudson Bay port for Ontario; Temperance law reform; law reform; Assessment law reform; reform of law re compensation to workmen; amendment of factory inspection; reform in public expenditures. When one reflects that these subjects touch at all points the civil, moral and personal and material interests of the people, the garvity of the indictment becomes emphasized. Every intelligent and unbiassed elector will see that there is in Ontario wide opportunity for reform in cardinal essentials of law making and administration, and that these can only be secured by substituting progress for obstruction, or so decreasing Sir Hames Whitney's majority as to put the fear of the public in his heart.

A NEGLECTED PROVINCE.

Mr. Rowell's address to the electors is a vigorous arraignment of the laxness and incompetence which has characterized the Administration of Ontario during the last seven years. The bilingual difficulty has been aggravated by administrative neglect, and the remedy is administrative energy and efficiency. The truth is that the Minister at the head of the Education Department is not an educationist, and does not understand either the biligual question or any other educational question. He speaks on subjects connected with his department only when he is forced to—his department only when he is forced heard at any gathering of educationists.

The stagnation in the Agricultural Department is due to the same cause. Mr. Duff is not, as Mr. Dryden was, a scientific agriculturist of the modern type. He has no sympathy with new ideas in farming. He belongs to the class of men who do things because their fathers and grandfathers did them, and who regard all new ideas as dangerous fads. He is a bad example and a poor inspiration to the farmers of Ontario. Any progress that is made is made in spite of him.

New Ontario suffers from the same administrative neglect and fossilism as Old Ontario. The giving away of two million acres of the finest land in the clay belt to a wealthy corporationtion is thoroughly characteristic of the policy of a Government that seems to have drawn its inspiration from the Family Compact.—Toronto Star.

ONLY THE SPOILS LEFT.

The wholesale decapitation of Government officials in Peterborough, is not an isolated instance. It is a part of the policy adopted by the Borden Government, as a fixed policy. That the thirst for preferment and office, which, among the Conservative members themselves, caused Mr. E. B. Osler to publicly declare that he "had never been so humiliated in his life before," extended in all its eagerness and acrimony to the rank and file of the party was demonstrated in Parliament yesterday. The coalition Government's feverish exploitation of the spoils system was laid bare in a vigorous debate, following the resolution of Hon. A. K. Maclean, calling for papers and information concerning all dismissals since the advent of the Nationalist-Conservative regime. Premier Borden's defence was illuminating. He confessed that he had modified his opinions somewhat since 1896, when he had addressed the House in whole sale condemnation of dismissals, and, while not admitting that the Government was departing from the just principle of dismissals being made only on the ground of active partisanship, pleaded that what had been done in the past made it very difficult for another party to come into office and not make concessions to its job-hunting archerents. In response to Hon. Mr. Emmerson's direct question as to whether there was to be discrimination in the application of the Parliamentary resolution dealing with dismissals from the service, or whether the same course would govern whether the officials were Liberal or Conservative, Mr. Borden would only say: "The Government will take all those matters into consideration."

The activity of Conservative partizans in the game of office is, however only natural. They fought hard in Ontario, especially to put Borden in office, and have got nothing in the way of flag supremacy, or British supremacy of influence, in the Government. They doubtless argue that if they "got it in the neck" and have had to lie down, as door-mats in front of His Majesty's council chamber for the use of all powerful French Nationalists, the masters of the Borden administration, they think they should at least have a little office, and if a Grit is in the way, he should be removed. The spoils of office is the only one thing they have left; the only thing of moment that has not been seized upon by the Nationalists; and as beginnings go, the Nationalists, having charge of the greatest spending and patronage departments of the Government, won't allow very much "spoils" to slop over.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

At Mr. Rowell's meeting in Massey Hall, says the Toronto Star, the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was received with thunders of applause. When Mr. Muir, at a meeting in Sir James Whitney's constituency, referred to the influence of Monk and Bourassa in Mr. Borden's Cabinet, he was greeted with shouts of "Take it back". The Liberal party is proud of its leader and its allies in Quebec. The Conservative party in Ontario hates to hear the names of its French-Canadian leaders.

APPROVES OF BOTH SPROULE AND ROWELL

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir.—I wish to express my approval of the stand Dr. Sproule, Speaker of the House of Commons, has taken in banishing strong drink from the table at Speaker's dinners. Though I do not agree with him, by any means, in his religious opinions, yet I strongly approve of the stand he has taken in the interests of total abstinence. He has been honoured with a high office and no matter how well he may perform its duties, his greatest credit will be his action in the interests of temperance. A public man who takes such a stand, will exert a great influence for good, and deserves the support of all the friends of temperance. On the same grounds I admire and commend the clear, outstanding stand which Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, has taken on the temperance matter. He is worthy of the support of all those who wish to see the good cause succeed. Thanking you for your space, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
Catholic Layman.

HOW BIG LEGISLATIVE MAJORITY IMPERILS POPULAR INTERESTS

As who should say, "When I ope my lips let no dog bark."

Everybody has seen at some time or other the self-opinionated over-bearing man whom Shakespeare describes in the words quoted.

For the last seven years everybody in Ontario has had a chance to see just what kind of man is at the head of affairs as Premier.

It's just that tone, "let no dog bark," that Sir James Whitney talks to deputations urging modern methods of Government, social and economic reforms, and progressive measures with which he, as an old man, has not kept pace.

One of the chief troubles with Sir James Whitney is his big majority—68 in a house of 104.

It has caused a temper naturally short to become shorter. It has caused opinions naturally stagnant to become petrified.

It has caused Sir James to imagine that his say-so was as sacred as the Ten Commandments.

It has caused him to squabble with his Cabinet Ministers, tell different stories from them on the bilingual school question and other matters and by implication to proclaim that he (Sir James) is the only one of the outfit that has the truth in him.

It has led to tyranny in the Cabinet, in the Legislature, in Parliamentary Committees and in the country.

It has led to gross extravagance. Government expenditure has doubled in seven years. The population —and that in the cities—has increased only 300,000. The expenditure has gone ahead ten times as fast as the population. The direct debt of Ontario has increased $10,000,000, and the indirect debt debt $3,000,000.

There has been mismanagement and waste, perhaps graft, in the Provincial institutions. There has been criminal carelessness as was the case in the Hamilton Asylum fire, when several unfortunates lost their lives through the neglect and incompetence of the officials.

Whitney's big majority has kept these matters from being properly investigated in the Public Accounts and other committees. Sheer weight of numbers has been able to thwart any effort to check things up.

What's more, the big majority has led to a breakdown in the administration of justice. Take the Kinrade case, the Orangeville case, the Beattie Nesbitt case. Try to remember all the murders that have gone undetected and unpunished in Ontario for the last seven years.

Too big a majority is a bad thing for any government. It leads to insolence in office, indifference to public rgihts and downright oppression.

Sir James Whitney's high-stomached majority needs puncturing or the thing will end fatally in an attack of apoplexy. As it is his majority is so big now that the government is fat-headed.

A little blood-letting will not hurt. It will clear things up.

Elect R. R. Hall, and put a first class crimp in the Whitney Government. Give Allan Studholme and the cause of Labour a lawyer-friend in the Legislature and give West Peterborough a man of action and ideas as its representative.

PRIME MINISTER THINKS HE OWNS THE ONTARIO FARM

Many years ago Mr. Hartley Dewart, in a political address attacking an unprogressive candidate who thought he should be elected because it had become a habit to vote for him, and who resented the intrusion of any opponent, told this story:

"One of the Conservative canvassers was arguing with a farmer on the value of continuity of service. 'If you hired a man to help work your farm,' said he, 'and he turned out to be a good man, wouldn't you hire him the second year?'

"'Yes,' said the farmer.

"'And if he did his work well the second year, wouldn't it be worth your while to take advantage of the information and the skill he had acquired and hire him the third year?'

"'Yes,' said the farmer.

"'And when it came around to the end of the year, wouldn't his skill and information be still greater? Wouldn't he be more useful to you than ever? Wouldn't you hire him again?'

"'No,' said the farmer, 'not if he thought he owned the farm.'"

That indicates exactly the position of affairs in Ontario to-day. The Premier, puffed up by the servile supporters around him, thinks he owns Old Man Ontario's farm. If he wants to give 2,000,000 acres—an eighth of the very best fertile region in the north—to Mackenzie and Mann and people object, he turns on them and berates them as if he owned the farm. If the tax reformers of his own party urge him to grant local option in taxation he tells them bluntly that they don't know what they are talking about. If the workmen complain of the long delay in bringing forward a compensation for injuries bill he acts as if he owned not only the farm, but the factories and the operatives. The plain truth is that the Government of Ontario is an autocracy; that the hired man not only thinks he owns the farm, but is permitted to act as if he had the title deeds in a safety deposit vault.

Were Sir James Whitney a wise, far-seeing, statesmanlike autocrat there might be some excuse for remaining under his iron rule. But he is not that sort of an autocrat at all. His Government is hopelessly weak on the administrative side. Dr. Pyne, as Minister of Education, would be a joke were it not that by his muddling and meddling thousands of children in this Province are missing the chance of a sound English education. This applies not only to the bilingual school issue, but to the hundreds of schools in the Province generally for which no qualified teacher can be secured because of the premature closing of the Model schools. Mr. Foy in the office of Attorney-General, Mr. Duff as Minister of Agriculture, Dr. Reaume as Minister of Public Works have never shown the remotest capacity for performing their duties. It looks as if it will take Dr. Reaume longer to obliterate the traces of the fire in the Parliament buildings than it took Christopher Fraser to build them. All along the line it is the same. Like their blustering and cavorting chief, the Ministers seem to have forgotten that Old Man Ontario owns the farm.

This condition of affairs is bound to attract the progressive people of Ontario to the Liberal party. The momentary discouragement of defeat can have no permanent ill-effect on a political party so long as it fights for a progressive policy under an enlightened and forceful leader. During the next few days the Liberals of Ontario should do everything possible to bring to the polls on Monday the thousands of independent electors who like the farmer of Mr. Dewart's story, think it time to make a change when the hired man gets the idea into his head that he owns the farm.

ALLAN JORDAN'S SCRAPS

A Short Story.

By F. Morton Howard

"A skinned rabbit," said Mrs. Jordan scathingly. "That's what you'll look like—a skinned rabbit!"

"Rabbits," replied Mr. Jordan, calmly, "don't grow beards."

"And you talk about cutting yours off," argued Mrs. Jordan swiftly. "Deliberately bringing yourself down to the level of a rabbit." Mr. Jordan, disdaining reply, walked to the mirror over the fireplace and stood regarding himself critically. Then he covered up the lower part of his face with his hand and regarded himself again.

"Yes, it'll have to come off," he said definitely. "With this beard and moustache of mine gone, I shall look a dozen years younger. People will think," he added, with ill-considered humour, "when they see us out together, that we're mother and son."

"Well, then, if you had only consideration for your wife's feelings, that alone ought to keep you from shaving off your beard. I don't see your object; You had a beard when I first met you, you had a beard when I married you. If you was to cut it off now I should feel that you were quite a stranger."

"It's no good your talking," broke in Mr. Jordan. "I've made up my mind. I'm going to have my chin shaved." Mr. Jordan, picking up his hat, made a dignified departure. Twenty minutes later a barber whipped his towel away from Mr. Jordan's neck with something of the flourish of a conjurer concluding an amazing trick. Mr. Jordan gazed at the novel appearance of his clean shaved face with a great deal of interest, not unmixed with curiosity and a smattering of dismay. Force of habit took him to the club, and here he found his bosom friend, Bob Little.

"Hello, Bob," said Mr. Jordan genially. Mr. Little turned and surveyed Mr. Jordan with a curious gaze which had no recognition in it.

"It's all right, Bob," said Jordan quickly. "You needn't go on. It's me right enough. Just been having a shave and a hair-cut."

"I should never have known you," confessed Mr. Little. "Regular horrified I was—I mean, regular surprised. What did you shave your beard for?"

"Improvement," explained Jordan, ordering only one drink. "How do I look?"

"Horrid," said Mr. Little laconically. "You ought to have shaved half your beard off first to see how it went." There was silence.

"Look here, Bob," said Jordan suddenly, "you'll have to help me through with this. If you'll come along and have supper with us the missus can't very well say all she thinks before you." With a touching loyalty to his friend Little professed his willingness to accompany Jordan back to supper.

Together the two men started briskly for Jordan's abode, but as they drew nearer their goal, their footsteps lagged. "You go in first," whispered Jordan fiercely.

"If I'm to back you up," pointed out Little, "I must be behind you, mustn't I?" Mr. Jordan, with a firmness which was not entirely due to hospitality, sought to push Little in to the passage. There ensued a short scrimmage, in the midst of which Mrs. Jordan appeared. Both men stood still.

"Good day, Mr. Little," she said politely enough. "Was you waiting to see Mr. Jordan?"

"Eh?" exclaimed both men in surprise.

"He's not in," she told them. "I expect him back at any time now."

"This is Jordan," said Mr. Little, waving a hand at the hesitating figure beside him.

"What a one you are for your jokes, Mr. Little," she smiled amusedly.

"But it is Alan," repeated Little, and Jordan nodded affirmatively. "He's had a shave."

"There is just a something like Alan about his nose," admitted Mrs. Jordan, eyeing her spouse critically.

"Don't be a fool," growled Mr. Jordan, detecting a gleam in his wife's eye. "I'm still Alan, and you know it well enough."

"Well, I'm sure—there's a nice way to speak to a lady," exclaimed Mrs. Jordan, drawing herself up, offendedly. "I'm surprised at you, Bob Little, bringing a man like that round here."

Mr. Little gazed helplessly at Jordan. "I'm going indoors," declared Jordan firmly. "I've had enough of nonsense." Mrs. Jordan swiftly shut the door in their faces and continued the conversation through the letter-box. "Take him away, Bob," she ordered. "You're carrying a joke too far. Bringing a man like that round here. Take him away, or it'll be the worse for you when Bill comes home." Mr. Jordan, inserting his latch key, made to open the door. At the same moment Mrs. Jordan released a scream of singular power and shrillness.

"Shut up, Annie," he ordered fiercely.

"Don't you dare call me Annie," came an indignant voice through the letter-box. "I'll tell Alan; and if you don't go away at once I'll scream and scream and scream."

"All right," said the baffled Jordan; "we're going!"

He and Little walked up the street. "Do you think she really don't recognize you?" asked Little.

"Of course she does," said Jordan bitterly. "It's her way of paying me out for getting shaved when she didn't want me to." They made their way back to the club, and sat gloomily thinking over the situation. Presently a few mutual friends began to trickle ino the establishment.

For a time they did not recognize Jordan, but when at last they did, they rallied him on his despondency. "S'spect he feels it,' hazarded Mr. Dick Purdy. "He's parted with an old friend to-day."

"Don't you take it to heart like that, Alan," begged another. "You can grow another beard, and in time folks will forget how you looked without one."

Perceiving that something heavier than they had imagined lay on the soul of Jordan, they plied him with sympathetic queries. At last he related to them the story of his rejection on returning home. Mr. Little acted as prompter when Jordan seemed likely to omit the more amusing details. "And then we came away," concluded Jordan. "Now laugh, you grinning porpusses!"

The availed themselves to the full of this permission, sourly regarded by Jordan. Suddenly Dick Purdy smacked his knee.

"I've got it," he shouted. "Do you want to pay her out Al? Very well, then listen." He explained his project at full length, others of the company suggesting artistic details from time to time. It was close on 9 o'clock when Dick, composing his face to an appearance of gravity, knocked at the Jordan's front door. "Who's there?" demanded Mrs. Jordan from the other side of the closed door.

"Me—Dick Purdy. Alan in?"

"No, not yet," replied Mrs. Jordan. "He might be back any minute. Will you wait for him?"

"Oh, it's nothing special," said Dick. "To-morrow'll do. Only I haven't seen him to-day yet, and—"

"[illegible] shaving off his beard and moustache?" asked Mrs Jordan curiously.

"Shaving off his beard?" echoed Dick.

"Yes. Had it done this afternoon. You wouldn't believe how it's altered him."

"Shaved!" muttered Dick, exhibiting consternation. "Then it must have been him after all."

"What do you mean?" asked Mrs Jordan, alarmed by his behaviour.

"Only something I heard just now," said Mr. Purdy. "But I don't want to alarm you. It was about burglars."

"Burglars?"

"Burglars here, at your house. Only if Alan really has shaved, there must have been some mistake. The police didn't call you because they didn't want to upset you, but——" Mrs. Jordan, her fears thoroughly roused, took him by the collar.

"Tell me all about it,' she ordered. "And what's it got to do with Al.?"

"Well, you see, about an hour ago, as I am told, the policeman on duty was going past here when he saw a man come up and put his latchkey in this very door. This policeman knew you rhusband slightly by sight, and he saw at once that this chap wasn't your husband. He was clean shaven, for one thing, but now, of course, from what you've told me—"

"Go on, go on!"

"Well, this cop rushed up and collared the chap, because he could see he was trying to sneak into your house from the quiet way he was doing things. He took him straight off to the station, and he's got him locked up there now."

"Locked up? My husband locked up?"

"If I was you,' suggested Mr Purdy, "I'd slip along to the station and get them to let you have a look at the chap. It might be poor old Alan, after all."

"I was just thinking abotu going off to the station at once," said Mrs. Jordan. "Which one is it?"

"Ah, there you have me," replied Dick, regretfully. "There's three of them, you know." A few minutes later Mrs. Jordan left the house hurriedly, Mr. Purdy watching her departure, hastened to the corner of the street.

"Has it worked?" asked Jordan, stepping up to him.

"It has," said Dick with emphasis.

Mrs Jordan, hastening along, blamed herself bitterly for her behaviour of the afternoon, and it was in a state of emotion that she entered the nearest police station. In response to her flood of queries, the inspector in charge could easil yprofess ignorance. To help solve the problem he telephoned to the second staion. "There's a chap at the Broadwood Street station that's been rnu in for area sneaking," he informed her, and she made a hasty march to Broadwood Street.

The area sneaker proved to be a stranger. The kindly inspector in charge at that station telephoned through to the third station. As a result Mrs. Jordan went on there. only to be confronted with a tramp who had broken a window. Long after ten she returned sorrowfully to hr home. She inserted her latchkey and discovered that the door was locked, and there was a light upstairs.

"Alan's been able to come home, after all," she decided joyfully.

She knocked at the door, but no response was forthcoming. A natural fear of the neighbours kept her from knocking continuously. And so, with rising impatience she knocked softly at intervals, till a half hour had passed. Then a window went up, and Jordan obtruded his head.

"Who's there?" he asked.

"Me—your wife."

"You said I wasn't your husband this afternoon," he reminded her. "You clear out—you must have come to the wrong house."

The window closed. Mrs. Jordan knocked again and again the window went up. "Will you go away," he shouted furiously. "If I ain't your husband, you don't live here, you know. You beat it, making all that row."

"Alan," she wailed desperately.

"All right, I'll let you in," he said, softening. "Only no blowing up about it, you know. Else, down goes the window."

"No blowing up," she promised. "Honour bright!"

"I've shown you you wasn't as clever as you thought," said Mr. Jordan an hour later, sleepily. "But I don't want to be too hard on you. Just to please you—to please you, mind—I'm going to let my beard grow again."

WIT AND WISDOM

Why are old maids the most charming of all people?—Because they are matchless!

Why is a policeman like a rainbow?—Because he generally appears after the storm is over.

Some people seem to think that they can ride into power on the rumble of their own voices.

In the beginning the woman sits down and waits for a husband! In the end she sits up and waits for him!

"Do you think women should propose?" asked the passee lady. "I don't know," mused the young thing. "Have you tried everything else?"

The ageing man is more impressed at a gathering of "old boys" by what he does not see than by what he does see. He misses his friends who are gone.

Sue: "You said you were going to marry an artist, and now you're engaged to a dentist." Flo: "Well, isn't he an artist? He draws from real life!"

Mrs. Brown: "Does your husband take off his shoes when he creeps up the stairs at two o'clock in the morning?" Mrs. Green: "No; I sprinkle the stairs with carpet tacks."

Teacher (severely): "Do you know what becomes of boys who run away from school every afternoon to play football?" Small Truant: "Some of em gets into the big leagues."

An open mind is the key to all power. We cut off a great many of the good things that we ought to enjoy because we set such narrow limits to everything by our strangling thought.

"When I was engaged to her she made me give up drinking, smoking, and cricket for her sake. Then I gave up something for my own sake." "What was that?" "The girl!"

Nell (seriously): "Between the rich old man I don't love and the poor young man I do love I am between two horns of a dilemma." Belle (flippantly) "Then take the horn of plenty."

Despondency is underhand conceit. It is just as well, when you bottle your wrath, to throw away the corkscrew. There are mighty few obstacles in the way of the man who is determined to make a fool of himself.

Barber: "Well, my little man, and how would you like your hair cut?" Little Freddy (aged six): "If you please, sir, just like father's; and don't forget the little round hole at the top where the head comes through."

It is now announced on the authority of an "eminent physician" that it is not healthy to rise before eight o'clock in the morning. This applies only to men. Wives, it is said, can rise at seven and start the fire as heretofore.

A hardened criminal ,convicted of a grave crime, said to the judge: "I'm not so bad a man, your honour, as you may think. If you'd only give me time for reflection and repentance——" "Very well," said the judge, "I'll give you fifteen years!"

"Wife, what has become of the grapes?" "I suppose, my dear, the hens pecked them off," was the reply. "Hens! hens! — some two-legged hens, I fancy," said the husband, with some impetuosity ;to which she calmly replied, "My dear, did you ever see any other kind?"

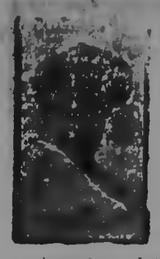
THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

JAMES R. SMITH was killed on Tuesday afternoon in an automobile accident. The accident happened when Mr. Smith turned suddenly to avoid a pedestrian, who had stepped directly in front of the machine. The automobile crashed into a telegraph pole and Mr. Smith was instantly killed. Mr. Smith has a reputation as a very careful driver and witnesses say he was driving very slowly at the time of the accident.

One hears much all over the country nowadays about reckless driving. There are two sides to every question. What about "reckless walking?"



The above paragraph which I clipped from a morning paper, suggests the following hints for pedestrians:

In crossing a street, always look straight ahead, up at the sky or down at your feet, but never by any chance to the right or left.

If you are trundling a baby carriage, always select a very crowded crossing to cross upon. Stand a moment or two upon the crossing, as if deliberating whether to embark or not, while all the drivers and chauffeurs are watching you anxiously, and then, with the utmost deliberation you are capable of, and the most nonchalant indifference to your surroundings, make the passage.

If you meet an acquaintance in the middle of the road by all means stop right there and have a quiet little friendly chat with him or her. Under no circumstances bother to step up on the sidewalk.

If you are a small boy, whenever you see an automobile coming, run across the road in front of it to see just how close you can come to being run over, without quite doing it. If you miscalculate by any chance you will have a fine revenge on the automobilist, as your parents can collect damages from him and he may even be held for manslaughter.

Whoever and whatever you are, regard all automobilists and drivers as your natural enemies, and in so far as you can without too much peril to your own skin, get in their way and hamper and annoy them.

I have entitled these few suggestive "hints" for pedestrians. I see my folly. A word to the wise is sufficient; a hint to most pedestrians is superfluous.

HOARD SPOOLS AND CARDBOARD

From the New York Evening Sun

Many a woman who has seen the playroom display of the Child Welfare exhibit has begun to hoard spools and pieces of stiff cardboard. The manifold uses to which these expenseless articles lend themselves in the entertainment of the child surprised some mothers who were old in experience. The spools served as foundations and the cardboard for shelves and tops of kitchen dresser, with the tiny toy dishes found in the 10-cent stores to fit them out; they build stoves with chimneys, chairs and a host of things that any bright child would easily conjure out for himself. In fact, they are better than the usual set of blocks. And the clothes pins—the things that cannot be done with an ordinary long two-pronged clothes pin!

SCHOOLGIRL SENTIMENT

"I am in love," whispered little Louise to me the other day. Louise is 15, and in the high school. There she meets many boys. Among the others, is one who stands pre-eminent among all the girls. He is handsome, and a football hero. And the combination has been too much for Louise. So she is pouring out upon him all the wonderful idealism which belongs to sweetness and purity. Perhaps he is worth it, and, equally, perhaps he is not. And in view of the negative possibility, I hate to see little Louise wasting all of her young ardour and budding beauty on one who may turn out to be merely a man of straw.

Yet it is useless to tell Louise that she is not in love. She knows that she is, and she defies you to prove to the contrary. Were not some of the great passions of history inspired by heroines as young as 12? She talks of Juliet, and wishes that free expression of one's feeling were permissible in these days.

There is both danger and delight in such a situation. We all know the fascination of love's young dream. Our grandmothers, who married early, felt that 15 was none too young, and that a girl at that age might make her choice as wisely as five years later.

But times have changed, and so I am sorry that Louise must have this experience. There is every chance too, that she will not want to marry him. In a few years she will have changed her ideals, and she will wonder how she could have given to such a man the precious pearl of girlish love.

Louise's mother is indignant and wishes to resort to harsh measures. Yet I am hoping that Louise may have the power within her to deal with the whole affair with dignity.

In the years that follow, she will feel better if she does not yield to mushy sentiment. And there should be pride and the maidenly reserve which will keep her from foolish melodrama.

The girl who respects herself knows the right thing to do. She only weakens her womanhood when she places the burden of a decision on others. She knows whether it is right for a boy to hold her hand, to invite her to a clandestine trip to a matinee, or to meeting in a department store or hotel corridor. Hence, why should she ask others what to do? And, if knowing the right, she finds herself choosing the wrong, then she should fly to the protection which some stronger nature can give. If the young football hero begs Louise to marry him, and in her heart of hearts she knows it is not wise, yet yearns to do it, she must seek the refuge of her mother's wings. Flight may be the only solution of the problem, but if flight saves her from a romantic elopement which may result in unhappiness, then she should leave at once.

Sentiment is a beautiful thing when it is allied with self control. Young love is a precious thing when it does not squander itself on an unworthy object. But little Louise and other girls of her age will be happier if they hold on to the things of childhood and put out of their minds premature longings for romances.—D. M.

THE GIRL AND SELF PITY

Perhaps there is nothing which a woman so desires throughout her life as sympathy. We may not be conscious of our need of it, yet when we gain it we are supremely content. A sympathetic friend, a sympathetic lover—what these mean to us!

Yet it often happens that in her craving for appreciation and understanding a woman becomes morbid. She indulges in self pity and is not happy unless someone is listening to her tale of woe.

Mariana is one of these girls. It is true she has had an unhappy life. When she was 14 her father died and since then she has worked for her living. Most of the time she has helped to support other members of the family, her mother and a younger brother. Now her mother is dead, the brother is prosperous and Mariana is relieved of severe financial responsibility. But Mariana still moans and groans and everybody knows she has reason to be a little disconsolate. But it does not draw people nearer to her to find her always "blue," so she has few friends, and that is the cause of another grievance. We all try to pet Mariana and tell her how sorry we are for her, and yet in our heart of hearts we wish she might pipe one cheerful note amid the plaintiveness of her life song.

Gloria, on the other hand, has every reason to be depressed. All her life she has sacrificed herself for other people. She was raised in a family of old ladies and her matrimonial chances were spoiled by the interference of aunts and great-aunts and grandmothers. Gloria is nearly 40 now, and for twenty-five years she has taken care of her old lady relations. Yet no one ever hears a complaint from Gloria, and this is what she says about it "It seemed to me that my burdens were so many that I should have to talk about them all the time, so I went to my old pastor and told him how I felt.—

"'Dont you ever pity yourself,' he advised, 'and don't expect too much sympathy. Then when you get sympathy you'll appreciate it more.'

"So I have gone on my way," Gloria continued, "trying to think that things were best for me. Other people have hard times, and I have found by comparison that my lot isn't the worst in the world. I haven't a husband, but the old ladies love me dearly; maybe the sum of their love is more than that of one man. Anyhow, I'm going to think so."

Would you rather be Mariana or Gloria? Mariana sits by her window and moans. "I'd better be dead." Gloria fights the battle of life and people reach out their hands to her because she gives sympathy and does not demand it.

Life is a battle for most of us. If you are single you probably look at your married friends and say, "See how happy she is. If I had a husband and little children I, too, would be happy." Yet how do you know that in the life of that married woman there may not be burdens which exceed any which have fallen on your shoulders? Then, too, the loss of a child, the loss of a husband would leave your married friend bereft, indeed, and she could not be as well equipped to take up her fight with the world as you are.

It is better to go through life giving sympathy than accepting it. Then when trouble comes to us we will find other hearts pouring out their bounty of love and understanding.

Morbid, self-seeking women are a scourge to their friends. Self-control is a necessity if a woman would be respected. People may listen to a tale of trouble and wonder at the same time why it is not possible to keep such things to one's self. There is a dignity in silence, in bearing trouble bravely, and she who would win respect must know that if she will depend upon herself, work out her own problems and say little, she will be happier than when she throws the burden of her disappointment or disillusion upon her friends.

364 GEORGE STREET

SPLENDID ADDRESS BY PROFESSOR COLEMAN

Well-known Educationist Lectured on Sunday Schoo Methods Before a Large Gathering of Sunday School Teachers and Workers in George St. Sunday School Last Night.

A very edifying lecture on Sunday school work was delivered in the basement of the George St. Methodist Church last evening by Professor F. J. Coleman, the prominent educationist of Toronto University.

The Rev. Isaac Couch occupied the chair. A splendid duet was rendered by Miss J. Callender and Mr. Thornton, while Mrs. Renwick sang a solo in a charming and devotional manner.

The lecture, which was listened to with marked attention by a large gathering, contained many helpful suggestions. Following is a synopsis thereof:

The Sunday school is a live thing, therefore the Sunday school must develop. The work of the Sunday school must increase tenfold to cope with the responsibilities of the 20th century. One of the greatest movements in social reform of the 20th century is the Sunday school movement. We cannot realize what the Sunday school work has meant to the Church. We are in the midst of wonderful changes.

One of the marked changes in human thought during the 9th century was the great change which placed upon the shoulders of society the responsibility of social amelioration. In the 19th century was introduced the pernicious doctrine of letting things alone, of letting individuals alone, but within recent years we have begun to feel that the state has a responsibility, and we feel that organizations such as the Church have much greater responsibility reaching outside their own little narrow points.

A thought which I should like to give expression to is that we do too much of our work by committee. Too often do we rely on our machinery, without paying sufficient attention to individuality. With all due respect to the National Sunday School Association, there seems a danger in connection with that organization of doing harm, if you will, because of its uniform machinery. This uniform machinery is liable to cause tremendous diversity of human nature, and then you have a uniformity that is a hindrance. We must have organizations to avoid waste, but as well as organizations we must have intelligence.

Separate class rooms in the Sunday school are also, in my opinion, a necessity. One day a young lady came to be on the verge of nervous prostration. I asked her what was the matter, and she told me it was the overwork that prevailed in the Sunday school. The most precious half-hour in the week for children should be the half-hour spent in the Sunday school, yet 75 per cent of the value is taken off because we do not hold the classes in separate rooms.

We are studying our problem in three aspects. We are studying the subject, the teacher and the future. To me religion means three things: Worship, communion with God and service.

GET A CALENDAR AND HELP ON A WORTHY OBJECT

Have you secured one of the pretty Christmas calendars in aid of the Peterborough Health Association? They were placed on sale this week in the drug stores. When you are down town, step into one of these shops and ask to see them. Everybody has one or more fancy calendars among their collection of Christmas gifts. Then, in making your selections this year, don't forget the Health Association. Remember that in purchasing one of these calendars, you will perform a two-fold act. In addition to having a suitable gift for your friends, you will help along the noble cause of this local organization, namely, that of fighting tuberculosis in this city. Already a number of these have been sold by interested workers, but there are still several hundred to be disposed of before the amount of money that the Association is endeavouring to raise through this medium, is secured.

The Christmas stamps are also now available. In sending parcels and letters, put a few of these stamps on them.

As was stated in Saturday's Examiner, the object of this sale is to raise funds, in order to engage a district nurse for Peterborough.

MR. BENGOUGH DELIGHTS A LARGE AUDIENCE

Mr. Bengough, the well known cartoonist and lecturer, attracted a large audience to the Conservatory of Music Hall last night. Mr. Bengough, who is one of Canada's popular entertainers, needs no introduction to the people of Peterborough, having favoured this city with his presence on previous occasions. His ability as an entertainer was never more pronounced, as far as his former engagements in this town are concerned, than was the performance given by Mr. Bengough last evening, and he has lost none of his popularity with Peterborough audiences. His skilful manipulation of the stencil, which was augmented by his versatility, was a source of wonder and admiration to all. He was a whole show in himself, displaying to full advantage his gifts as an actor. The programme was opened with a true to life impersonation of a tea party chairman, a role which won demonstrative applause for the actor. This was followed by a sketch, showing how the alphabet could be displayed pictorially, and was followed by a similar one, in which words of the English language played an important part.

Next followed a side-splitting impersonation of two Irish Parliamentary members engaged in a heated discussion on Home Rule, and so on throughout the entire performance.

Mr. Burgough is brimful of humour, a phase of his make-up, which he succeeded in displaying to full advantage last night. His acting is full of life and variety, and his mimicry is natural, graceful and devoid of the extreme. His treatment of the different sketches, and the running fire of conversation which he maintained while drawing them, brough rounds of applause from the audience.

Mr. R. J. Dewey presided at the piano, and his playing added much to the enjoyment of the performance.

Used Profane Language To Hotel Guest

A local hotel proprietor was arraigned in the police court this morning on a charge of using profane and grossly insulting language to a guest. After considerable evidence had been taken in the case, and after numerous witnesses had been examined, Magistrate Dumble dismissed the case on the ground that the plaintiff had brought the trouble on himself, in as much as he had grumbled about the food in an ungentlemanly manner, instead of taking the action a prudent man would take, that of getting out when he did not like it.

FIRE HALL NOTES

The fire brigade, under the guidance of Mr. Edwards, of the Quaker Oats Company, and in charge of Chief Howard, were taken in relays through the Quaker Oats Company's premises yesterday. This was done to familiarize the men with the general layout of the interior of the building, so that in case of fire they would be able to negotiate their way throughout the plant. This phase of fire drill is customary, and is practised at frequent intervals, so that the men may become familiar with the interior of the large manufacturing plants of the city.

List of Dismissals Made by the Conservative Government

OTTAWA, DEC. 6.—A number of new appointments for Peterborough and the Trent canal office have been announced. They are as follows:

Ex-Ald. Phelan succeeds William Rudkins, collector of inland revenue.

Ernest Bartlett succeeds Ernest S. Clurry, accountant in the Trent Canal office.

J. R. Davis succeeds James Swanston, second assistant lock-master of the Trent Canal.

Alex. Calder succeeds John Cronin, lockmaster at No. 6 locks.

Benjamin McGill succeeds William Taylor, caretaker of the Customs House.

DOMESTIC HINTS

One hundred tons of coal when burned produce a ton of soot.

Always boil a clothes line before using it. It makes it smoother and easier to handle.

When whisking an egg be sure that your basin and knife or whisk are perfectly dry if you wish a good stiff froth.

To clean looking-glasses or windows polish with tissue paper, which gives a lustre brighter than chamois leather does.

Medical men, on an average, die sooner than other professional men. Between the ages of 45 and 65 two doctors die to one clergyman.

To lessen the labours of a window cleaner a Massachusetts man has invented a long-handled brush with a magazine for soap on its back.

When mending kid gloves use cotton instead of silk. The cotton is not likely to cut the kid, and the mended corner is less conspicuous than when silk is used.

A glass of hot water before breakfast is a cleanser and tonic for the entire system. For an oily, greasy skin, squeeze half a lemon into the water; drink without adding sugar.

Doctors have discovered that even if bread carry infective germs it can always be sterilized by the simple expedient of spreading it with a thin layer of butter and lightly toasting.

If soap has a coarsening effect upon the skin it would be well to use it but once a week, using a good cold cream to remove the dust and dirt from the face. Follow the massage with tepid water, and then apply cold water to tone the skin.

A paste of whiting, soap and milk is the best for dust-stained alabaster ornaments. The paste must be left to dry on, and then washed away, the surface being first dried with a cloth and then with a flannel.

To clean marble take two parts of soda, one of pumice, and one of salt (all in powder), and mix to a paste with water. Rub this on to the marble, not forgetting to add some "elbow grease," and wash off with salt water. Finish with clean cold water and a soft cloth.

In cleaning oilcloth use very little water, for fear some of it may get under the oilcloth and rot it. A little kerosene added to the water improves it for cleansing. White spots from spilling hot liquid on oilcloth may be removed with a few drops of spirits of camphor.

To prevent brass from tarnishing, dissolve half an ounce of shellac in half a pint of methylated spirit. Cork it tightly and leave it till next day. Then pour off the clear liquid for use. Slightly heat the brass and paint it over with the solution, using a camelhair brush.

Son Of York Shows Up Some Inconsistencies

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Hon. A. B. Morine is a merry old soul; a merry old soul is he, and a merry old soul, indeed; at least so he showed himself at Mr. Peck's meeting on Tuesday night. He remarked that even a political meeting should not be dull; and he certainly did his best to keep it from being dull. How could any meeting be dull with such a genial old joker on the platform?

Mr. Morine came to Toronto five years ago from Newfoundland, owns a handsome residence on Sherbourne street; is at the head of a prominent legal firm in the Queen City; thrusts himself in every activity, religious and political; in fact contrives to keep himself in the limelight as much as possible. He derided Mr. Hall's efforts for the working man, asserted that he belonged to the classes rather than to the masses, and ended with comparing his efforts with Mr. Hall's. The courts, he said, were after all, the working man's best resort; why, even he, the philanthropic Mr. Morine, had tried a case for $150! Unfortunately, every working man cannot afford such a "hand out" to the best lawyer in the country. He wants to have his case settled out of the courts, and settled promptly. If Mr. Morine had correctly read this Liberal plank in their platform, he would have discovered that they have no intention of slavishly copying the British Act, but of so modifying it that litigation on the part of the employees would be an impossibility. Nor is the report of the ablest Chief Justice needed to form such an Act; in fact, the Whitney Government have an amazing propensity in this respect—they are never acting, they are always waiting for some report.

The genial speaker asserted that the Liberals, including Mr. Hall, were conducting a campaign of misrepresentation in order to get the working men's votes. Emphatically this is not so, and could any one be guilty of more gross misrepresentations than was Mr. Morine when he referred to the educational policy of the Liberal party?

Any man who has heard Mr. Hall speak during the past few weeks, has not heard him recklessly attack the University of Toronto. What he has charged is that the present Government are ignoring the public schools to the advantage of the University of Toronto.

In the whole course of his speech Mr. Morine hardly mentioned the public schools, except to glorify the cheap text books of the Whitney Government; not referring to any criticism of these text books or to the well known name on their covers.

In defending the three-fifths clause, the learned gentleman must have felt that he had little ground to stand upon. However, this did not preplex him very long, for abandoning all ideas of his own, he simply stood upon Sir James Whitney's ground and used Sir James Whitney's jaw-worn, stock, old arguments. We all know them, and we also know that no arguments can justify a failure—such as the three-fifths clause.

Mr. Morine referred to the splendid record of the Whitney Government. Mr. Morine did not refer to the Canadian Northern Railway's land grant of 2,000,000 acres in Ontario's fertile clay belt.

Mr. Morine did not refer to the discontent regarding his Government throughout Northern Ontario.

He did not refer to the backwardness of education in half of the province, to the lax administration of justice in many cases, to the unprogressiveness of Sir James himself in regard to the tuberculosis problem, in regard to immigration, in regard to civil service reform, in regard to taxation on improvements, etc., etc. Mr. Morine chose safer ground, and stood there.

We have heard Mr. Morine. He came, saw and conquered—his love for Mr. Rowell. To-night belongs to "Dr." King. The Honourable A. B. referred to "Dr." King's efforts in conjunction with Mr. Hall to administer "a sugar coated dose," to the poor, misguided working man.

Go and hear "Dr." King, all ye good Tories and all good Grits; hear him and see him administer such a dose, not "sugar-coated" but bitter as gall to the "sit-away-backs" and "let-well-enough-aloneists" of the Whitney Government—such a dose that they'll have to swallow it whether they like it or not. If you want to hear a fearless, fighting, eloquently earnest young man, go.

NON-PARTIZAN PARTIZAN ON CRONIN'S CRUEL DISMISSAL

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir, Permit me to take up a few lines in your paper to entering a protest at the dismissal of Mr. John Cronin as lockmaster at Lock No. 6, Peterborough. I do so, as a life-long Conservative, as one who voted for Mr. Burnham at the last Dominion election.

It seems to me that this introduction of the spoils system into the Dominion Government service is not in accordance with the pledges made by the leaders of our party previous to September 21st.

There is no excuse for the dismissal of John Cronin, other than to make a job for some party worker. As a protest against this action on the part of the local Conservative party, I intend on Monday next to cast my vote against Mr. Peck—Mr. Peck is being "boomed" by the same people and party that stood behind Mr. Burnham, but he will find that Mr. Burnham's action in dismissing John Cronin at the approach of winter, will cost him a number of votes. I am not the only Conservative who intends to show my disapproval of Mr. Cronin's dismissal by voting against Mr. Peck on Monday.

This action on the part of Mr. Burnham and his executive is one of the most contemptible imaginable. Here we have an old man, who has lived almost all his life in Peterborough, and who was performing his work satisfactorily to the Department, kicked out of his job in the dead of winter—just at Christmas time, in fact. In the dead of winter, he is asked to vacate his house. Mr Cronin, I understand, has a sick daughter, and we all know what he has suffered by the hand of death visiting his household on more than one occasion during the last two years. I am sure, when the facts are known to the public, Mr. Peck and his running mate, J. Hampden Burnham, will not find their position strengthened by the fair-minded citizens of Peterborough.

Mr. Peck must bear his share of responsibility in this matter. The same executive and Conservatives are supporting Mr. Peck as Mr. Burnham. The same convention that nominated one nominated the other. They must both stand together. Peterborough is being disgraced by occurrences of this kind and the city is sure to suffer—wrongs are always avenged.

Yours truly,
CONSERVATIVE.

APPEAL ALLOWED BY SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

Important Decision Given in the Case of Bennett Vs. Havelock Electric Light and Power Company, Which Has Been Before the Courts for Over Three Years---Shareholder's Rights Definitely Defined.

A decision of the utmost importance to shareholders and affecting the rights of every shareholder in Ontario was handed down by the Court of Appeal for Ontario, this morning, at Toronto, when the appeal of the Havelock Electric Light and Power Company was allowed with costs.

The case has been before the Courts in one form or another for over three years, and has been closely watched by the legal fraternity, both here and in the United States, as well as by people with money invested in the stock of incorporated companies in this Province.

The question being as to the judiciary relationship of a director, the extent of fact and obligation of his position and the power of a majority of shareholders to confirm and approve of the management and direction of the corporate affairs.

At the trial judgment was given dismissing the action but without costs. From this judgment the plaintiffs appealed and their appeal was allowed, the defendant directors were ordered to pay $4,700, and all costs of the litigation, and the findings of the trial Judge practically reversed.

The highest Court in the Province has now settled the law in the matter, at least it is said that that is the effect of the judgment handed out today, the Court defining the right of majority of shareholders to conduct and run their affairs as they may see fit, after proper consideration of all the circumstances, the Court of Appeal reinstates the judgment at the trial, ordering the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the appeals to the Divisional Court at Toronto, and of the defendants' successful appeal to the Court of Appeal.

S. T. Medd and R. R. Hall appeared for the defendants, and D. O'Connell for the plaintiffs.

COMMERCIAL CABLE COY'S RATES

Cable Co., in regard to it at that time. We shall adopt, in accordance with our understanding with the Postmaster General of Great Britain entered into long ago. That was before the Bell Telephone Co. acquired the Western Union Telegraph Co.

The Western Union now seeks to give the impression that it originated this plain word cablegram at half rates. The fact that it is not to go into effect until Jan. 1st, while the reductions go into effect at once, shows who originated it.

I would add that teh Postal Telegraph Co. has to-day appointed a Superintendent of Telephone Service.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED ONCE MORE

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS AGAIN VANQUISH TERRIBLE AILMENT.

Alcide Tramblay Issues Statement for the Benefit of Others.—Good News for Sufferers from Kidney Disease.

Mistassini, Lac St. Jean, Que., Dec. 6.—(Special)—That even the deadly Bright's Disease, the most fatal form of Kidney Disease, can be cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills after all other means have failed has again been proved in the case of Mr. Alcide Tramblay, a well-known resident of this place. In order that other sufferers may benefit by his experience Mr. Tramblay has given the following statement for publication:

"I was troubled with Bright's Disease, Rheumatism and Gravel for seven years. Three doctors prescribed for me, but they did not help me. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing. I was always tired and nervous and had dark circles under my eyes.

"I heard of other cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills and started to use them with the result that in one month I was completely cured, and have been in good health ever since."

Bright's Disease is a disease of the Kidneys. Gravel and Rheumatism are caused by diseased Kidneys failing to strain impurities out of the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure them all by curing the Kidneys.

BIG SQUAD OF HOCKEYISTS WORKING OUT AT Y.M.C.A.

There was a big squad of hockeyists at the Y.M.C.A. last night for the training course, and an hour's hard work was put in with Mr. Thompson in charge. The class was given free hand exercise, dumb-bell drill, vaulting-horse work, basketball and running, ending up with a swim. Among those out were Park, Bond, Groux, McMartin, Anderson, Hall, Kennedy, Hill, Latimer, Weir, Cook, White and Heard.

The class will meet again to-morrow night at 7.30 o'clock and a full attendance is expected. There is no formality about Mr. Thompson's methods and the boys are enjoying the work immensely, while it's beneficial effects are being already felt. The squad will begin hockey practice when the ice comes, in splendid shape, and the players who have been turning out at the Y.M.C.A. will be the ones that will be first considered when the line-up of the teams is being settled. President Ray, Mr. McGeachie and other executive members are at every workout in the Y.M.C.A. and the players who are attending are being carefully spotted. The willing workers will get the first call and the sooner the players realize that, the better for themselves. There are a few of the intermediate players who would be the better for this preliminary training and who have not been out so far. They should get into line at once. A well-conditioned team is half the battle, and Peterborough will get the jump on the other teams if they take advantage of the splendid faculties at the Y.M.C.A.

HOCKEY

A few hundred hockey fans who have been knocking their heels before the shin-heater in the corner post-office for want of something better to do are wondering how the Kingston Frontenacs are going to enjoy the services of young Marchand, their last year's goaler. Marchand has been sojourning in Cleveland, and despite the August 1st clause of the O. H. A. residence rule, has announced that he will return to Kingston to play before the season opens. According to reports Allan Davidson and William McCrimmon are also returning from the West at this late date to wear the Frontenac colours. And Kingston is so particular!

Mr. Jas. T. Sutherland of Kingston, the famous coach of the Kingston Frontenacs, and a member of the O. H. A. executive, was in the city to-day on business, and renewed acquaintances with his hockey friends in Peterborough. Kingston will have junior and senior teams this winter.

The Toronto Star says that Blakely, of the Peterborough O.H.A. team, is playing with West Toronto Victorias this season. Does anyone here know Blakely?

DROWNED AT KINGSTON

Special to The Examiner.

KINGSTON, ONT., DEC. 7.—Frederick Rush of Toronto, aged 45 years, married, deck hand of the steamer "Prince Rupert," while walking along Richardson's wharf, to board his vessel, last night, tripped into the slip and was drowned. The body was found this morning.

NARROW ESCAPE

Had it not been for the quick action on the part of the engineer on the Port Hope-Toronto train this morning, a butchers' outfit would inevitably have come to grief at the Simcoe street crossing. The man tried to drive under the gates when they were being lowered and succeeded in getting under the first, but the second one was down before he got through and he had to drive between the box cars on the siding and the main track.

A horse was killed and a vehicle demolished a few weeks ago at a small station outside the city in the very same manner. The matter has been drawn to public attention at different times, that it is strictly against the rules of the railway and by-law of the city, for any person to attempt to drive across the track under these circumstances, and any person doing same, is liable to severe punishment.

Unique Hold-up

Citizens of Entwistle Board Train in Regulation Outlaw Style

Special to The Examiner.

ENTWISTLE, ALBERTA, DEC. 7.—Final and satisfactory adjustment of the recent differences arising between the Railway Commissioners and local officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific at this place, appears now to be assured through the energetic action of a committee of determined citizens, who are to-day making no effort to keep back the facts from publication. Upon the refusal of the G. T. P. train crews to obey the recent order of the Commissioners to make regular stops at Entwistle, as well as the suburban station a mile and a quarter outside the town, the committee mentioned a night party with red lanterns, boarded the train in true outlaw style, and after paying the fare of 20 cents per head, as demanded by the Conductor for their few minutes' ride of a mile and a quarter to the suburban station, proceeded to advertise the situation to the train's passengers.

It had been the plan of the "hold-up" committee, in case the train crew should not accede to their wishes, to go to Edson and board the Division Superintendent with a formal demand for explanation as to his reasons for failure to comply with the order of the Railway Commissioners. This proved unnecessary, as the Superintendent was on board, and was also wroth, stating to the Committee the next morning, in no mild language, that stopping a train was a penitentiary offence, and that action on that ground had already been commenced.

The committee advised the Superintendent to go ahead with the action, as if it was just the kind of publicity they were looking for. Finding his threats, as well as his bluffs futile, the Superintendent ordered the train stopped at Entwistle, and even became so docile as to promise regular stops at this station in future. A monster petition of Entwistle citizens is now being prepared with a view to bringing the G. T. P. officials into a clearer understanding of up-to-date hold-up methods when townsite rights are called in question. As there was no bloodshed in this instance, it is generally believed that the Entwistle outlaws will not be immediately prosecuted for their determined undertaking as a red lantern organization.

LOOKING TO GOMPERS

Special to The Examiner.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., DEC. 7.—Somehow or other the heads of the labour organization and others seem to be turning to-day towards Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labour, as if expecting something more than was given in his statement denying Detective Burns' insinuations last night. It is known here that the Federal officers have been closely watching for a long time the movements of the head of the labour movement in America. In fact, his path has been trailed by detectives ever since the investigation into the McNamara case begun.

ELECTED OFFICERS

There was a large attendance of members at the regular meeting of Queen Alexandria Circle No. 136, Ancient Order of Foresters, held last night in S.O.E. Hall. Four candidates were duly initiated into the Circle. After the usual business had been disposed of the Chief Companion called on Bro. Record to take the chair, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

I. Guard .....Mrs. Geo. Tumain
O. Guard .....Mrs. Saddler
Chaplain .....Mrs. W. James
Physician .....Dr. Morgan

The circle is in a flourishing condition, having added twelve members thing looks good in future for the Circle's success.

THE WRONG IDEA OF PNEUMONIA

From the Chicago Tribune

In talking of pneumonia it is necessary to repeat many times that pneumonia is not a bad cold run mad.

Pneumonia is an acute local disease of the lungs, which, according to the gravity of the case, become more or less consolidated or choked up. The more of the lung tissue that is thus choked the less the lungs are able to breathe. The first consequence of this helplessness on the part of the lungs is that the heart labours to get enough blood to keep things going, and this is why we see the distressing rapid and shallow breathing so characteristic of the disease.

With all the heart can do it can only pump blood, it cannot oxygenate it—that is the function of the lungs. Presently, therefore, the blood stream becomes more and more impure, owing to lack of oxygen, and in those cases ending in death one of two things happens—either the heart gives out entirely, unable to stand the strain put upon it, or else the system is overcome by toxins, that is to say, by the impurity induced by the lack of oxygenation.

It has long been recognised that what the pneumonia patient needs is oxygen, and this is best supplied by a direct current of fresh air

There is less pneumonia among people who ventilate well than among the stuffy. And there is less pneumonia in the summer than in the winter, because in the summer there is a free circulation of air through all our houses. The ideal treatment of pneumonia is to carry the patient into the open air and keep him there, with proper precautions against wind and weather. But as this cannot always be done, the patient can at least be placed in the largest, sunniest and best ventilated room in the house.

A False Alarm.—A report was rife in the city to-day to the effect that two East City young men, Mr. Horace Coon and Mr. John Gillespie, broke through the ice in the canal, while skating last night. The Examiner interviewed one of the young men to-day, and was informed that the report was simply a false alarm, and altogether wrong, as they were skating on a pond near the C. P. Ry. and one of them got a foot wet. The informant also stated that atpresent the canal is not in a safe condition for skating, although many have been indulging in the pleasure.

Patronize Home Industry.—There is no need of sending to Toronto, or elsewhere, for showcases, or store-fixtures of any kind. Patronize the Peterborough Showcase Co., a well-equipped factory, for turning out large contracts, as well as small ones The material and workmanship are of the best. Prices are right, and terms to suit all people. Any one intending to equip their stores with showcases, wallcases, etc., for the coming Christmas trade should send in their order as soon as possible, before the rush begins and not leave everything to the last two weeks.—W. THEOBALD, manager; Factory, 709 Water St. Telephone 1153.

Join—In a movement to modify the unnecessary hardships incident to holiday shopping. Every year the celebration of Christmas grows more elaborate. For two weeks before Christmas the stores do a "capacity business" and the pressure on their facilities is intensified at every point The public more and more disapproves long hours and late work, particularly for young women and girls. Many shoppers, through thoughtlessness, defer their purchases until the last moment, at the cost of unnecessary strain upon the salespeople and delivery force. You can benefit yourself and everyone concerned if you will do your Christmas shopping early in the day and early in December, and all will be the happier for it.—A Christmas Shopper.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common Food I was in a terrible condition. soon because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. ROYALTY AT DELHI

Gorgeous Pageant Accompanies Arrival in the City

GATHERING FOR DURBAR

Delhi, India, Dec. 8.—The roar of an Imperial salute of 101 guns welcomed the King-Emperor and Queen-Empress on their arrival here yesterday.

Equipages passed along the roads crowded with Indian princes, military officers and Government officials, and streams of natives went the same way.

After a series of presentations, Their Majesties proceeded to a pavilion within a wall of the fort, where 150 ruling chiefs were introduced. Meanwhile the provincial legislators had gathered on the ridge by the durbar camp to greet the royal party.

Then began the great procession to the camp four miles away. Throughout India a holiday had been decreed, and hordes of natives had gathered.

As Their Majesties approached, the command to present arms was passed along the line of troops. European spectators took off their hats and the natives bent deep towards the ground. The King, the Queen and the Viceroy bowed right and left in acknowledgment.

The bodyguard of Indian princes, who followed immediately after, outshone in splendor all that had passed.

Their Majesties entered the city through the Ging's gate, now opened for the first time since 1857, when the King of Delhi went to public worship.

All along the route the impression seemed to be profound, and the reception was a cordial one. On arrival at the camp the troops filed past the Imperial carriage, receptions followed, and the King was presented with a brief address of welcome, to which he replied.

Their Majesties and the viceregal party then repaired to their camp, of which Circuit House, built by Lord Curzon in 1903, is the centre.

The vast camp stretches along the great trunk road in long symmetrical rows of white tents, almost blinding in the vertical Indian sun, while the whole place when Their Majesties entered blazed with the bright hues of the east.

About a quarter of a million persons have taken up their quarters, in the canvas city, which is broken up by green lawns, polo grounds, fountains and avenues of trees.

The great day of course will be on Tuesday, Dec. 12, when the most notable ceremony of all will take place. As a unit the vast multitude will head toward the two amphitheatres that have been erected on the spot where in 1877 Lord Lytton formally announced to the Indian Empire Queen Victoria's assumption of the title of "Empress of India."

Thus probably a hundred thousand people will be enabled to witness the proclamation of his Imperial Majesty as King-Emperor of India.

Infanta Is Contrite.

Madrid, Dec. 8.—King Alfonso has received a letter from the Infanta Eulalia asking him to pardon her, and saying that she had acted in a moment of forgetfulness. "She had," she said, "no intention of wounding the royal family nor from a political motive. She begs to have an opportunity of showing that she is an affectionate aunt and a true and loyal Spaniard."

The trouble arose from the publication of a book relating her experience of court life, which the King forbade her to publish.

United States Banks Help Germany.

Vienna, Dec. 8.—The Berlin correspondent of Die Zeit says that during the height of the Anglo-German crisis, the French and English banks having withdrawn their credits from the German banks, the latter appealed to American banks for aid. This was forthcoming, adds the correspondent, after the American bankers were assured that there would be no war. This assurance, the Germans were able to give after consultation with the Government.

TO RESUME JANUARY 10

House of Commons Adjourns for its Christmas Vacation

"SPOILS SYSTEM" DEBATE

Ottawa, Dec. 8.—"This House stands adjourned till February, January 10."

Speaker Sproule corrected himself before it was too late, and the Parliamentary advocates of the vaster vacation heaved a sigh as they realized that their aspirations which had not dared look beyond January 17, had trembled on the brink of being more than realized.

The concluding instalment of the debate on the "spoils system" yesterday degenerated largely into a frequent repetition of the "you're another" style of argument. Orators declaimed of the swing of the axe and the fall of the razor edge blade of the guillotine, and J. H. Sinclair of Guysboro even traced its gory trail back into the mythical age of Tory iniquity "before 96."

Hon. Wm. Pugsley again brought up the case of the boundary water commission. The late Government's recommendations, he said, had been approved by the British Government. The commission was a tribunal, not to act for either Government, but to do justice as between the Governments of Canada and the United States.

When the House met the Premier read a letter from Lord Strathcona telling of the proposed cut in cable rates, and Hon. L. P. Pelletier read a cable from Postmaster Samuels informing him that the cut would go into effect on January 1, 1912.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux congratulated his successor on reaping where he himself had sown. It was only the first instalment, he said. There was a movement on foot in Britain for a bolder step.

"We should have a Government-owned cable. I think the time has come when the cable monopoly should be restrained by the construction by the Government of a state-owned cable."

In answer to a question by C. A. Wilson (Laval) as to whether the Canadian Copyright Bill would be founded on the bill just passed by the Imperial Parliament, Hon. Martin Burrell said that the latter bill had not been received, but when it was, it would be given careful consideration.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, in answer to a question of J. H. Sinclair (Guysboro), said he believed the outside fisheries service might be reorganized with benefit to the service. For instance there were defects in the present method of appointing fisheries inspectors. He was collecting information with a view to action.

Hon. R. L. Borden announced that the Government intended to introduce the measure to establish a tariff commission at the present session.

Hon. Jacques Bureau raised a laugh by asking whether the Minister of Justice was aware that, according to newspaper report, the notorious Bill Miner was in the vicinity of Ottawa and whether steps would be taken towards his capture.

The ex-Minister was twitted by the Premier with his new-found zeal in the matter.

The House agreed to refund the fees, less cost of printing and translation, of private bills undisposed of at the last session, owing to the sudden dissolution.

A bill of Robert Bickerdck (Montreal-St. Lawrence), to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act, received its second reading, with an amendment. The bill provides for the same protection to the children of other religious denominations as to the children of Roman Catholics and Protestants, the Jews being the class aimed at. The amendment gives the court discretion as to the suitability of the committee of three of the same race and religion as to the child appointed under the act. In the discussion the committee (H. B. Ames, Montreal, St. Antoine) objected that the terms of the measure were too wide. There were a great many religious denominations. What about Armenians, Chinese or Hindus. Mr. Bickerdike thought the wider the measure the better.

Clergymen to Testify.

Montreal, Dec. 8.—A Protestant minister and a Roman Catholic priest will be the principal witnesses on Monday when hearing takes place on the formal inscription for judgment following the desistment of Eugene Hebert from defending the judgment originally annulling the marriage of himself and Emma Marie Clouatre under the provisions of the ne temere decree.

Rev. Mr. Timberlake, the Methodist pastor who married the Roman Catholic pair will be the Protestant minister and Rev. Father Callaghan, chancellor of the Roman Catholic diocese, will represent his church, producing as a portion of his evidence a copy of the famous decree under which the wedding was declared null and void.

Both ministers were present at court yesterday morning when the case was adjourned until Monday. They are expected to make proof of the marriage and the stand of the defendant, based upon the decree.

Not content with getting judgment formally, following the desistment of the husband, who retired from the fight because of lack of funds to fight his wife's opposition, George V. Cousins, the attorney for Mrs. Hebert, wants the testimony taken, owing to the principle at stake.

M'MANIGAL TESTIFIES.

Mcdamaras' Accomplice Before Grand Jury All Day.

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.—"I've got hundreds of thousands of dollars and the American Federation of Labor back of me. It took only $30,000 to clear Vincent Altman of Chicago, and if they could not convict him they can't convict me."

This boast, attributed yesterday by Detective Malcolm McLaren to James B. McNamara as the latter was being taken on a train from Detroit to Chicago on the night of April 12 last, caused Ortie E. McManigal, then also under arrest, to become angered with McNamara for his independent statement and was the first circumstance that led McManigal to break from his companies, and eventually to confess his connection with various dynamiting explosions throughout the country.

The federal grand jury heard McManigal's story all day and will hear more of it to-day, laying the foundation for the probe into the alleged dynamiting conspiracies that extend from coast to coast in the last three years. The McNamaras were not brought before the federal grand jury yesterday, and it may be that McManigal's story will be regarded as sufficient and the other two will be taken to San Quentin without interrogation here.

Details of what McManigal knows of the alleged conspiracies was given to the grand jury yesterday. That his story implicates other men in the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers became known through various sources.

McManigal alleges that persons other than John J. McNamara, the secretary and treasurer, paid him for the twenty "jobs" of dynamiting which he says he accomplished in 1907.

The story of McManigal will be of great value to the Government's investigators, and the state will not try him on the indictments against him until the federal authorities are through. Even then, it was stated last night on good authority, District Attorney Fredericks will recommend his discharge on account of signal service rendered.

Malcolm McLaren, the detective who arrested J. B. McNamara and McManigal, stayed outside the grand jury chamber yesterday waiting for McManigal. While thus waiting, McLaren gave a new version, new in important details, of the evidence and circumstances which led up to the arrest of McManigal and McNamara in Detroit.

A. F. of L. Statement.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Organized labor in America has no desire to condone the crimes of the McNamaras, according to a statement authorized last night by the American Federation of Labor. The statement, which was issued at the close of a three-hour meeting behind closed doors, denounces the McNamaras and continues:

"It is cruelly unjust to hold the men of the labor movement either legally or morally responsible for the crimes of an individual member. Insofar as we have the right to speak we welcome any investigation which either federal or state courts may undertake. The American labor movements and its friends are loyal Americans and seek to obtain the abolition of wrongs and the attainment of their rights within the law."

Watching Gompers.

Indianapolis, Dec. 8.—That the Federal Government has been watching closely the movements of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was made known here Wednesday night, when U. S. Attorney Miller told of a secret Washington conference held between the labor head and Prosecutor Baker of the county about six weeks ago.

The visit was made about the time the county officials were attempting to prevent the federal authorities from gaining possession of the books and records obtained in the offices of the International Ironworkers, when McNamara was arrested. Baker says he will see Gompers again in January.

Gompers Attacks Burns.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Samuel Gompers has issued a formal statement saying:

"Detective Burns evidently believes that if he repeats a falsehood often enough, it may become truth. On no other theory would he repeat the falsehood that I knew that the McNamaras were guilty."

Hydro Bylaw In Paris.

Paris, Dec. 8.—At a general meeting of the Board of Trade yesterday, the advisability of securing Hydro-electric service for Paris was discussed. Harry Acres, Government engineer, was present and gave an estimate of some $13,000 to install the system in Paris. It is probable a by-law will be submitted to the ratepayers in the near future.

Princess Reaches Halifax.

Halifax, Dec. 8.—The steamer Empress of Ireland arrived in the harbor at 1.15 this morning and docked at 1.30. The Princess Patricia, daughter of the Duke of Connaught, is a passenger. The princess proceeded to Ottawa by the regular train at eight o'clock this morning.

Father Carson Appointed.

Kingston, Dec. 8.—Archbishop Spratt has appointed Father Carson Merrickville, to Picton, to succeed Father Killen, who was appointed to the archbishop's old charge at Belleville. Father Wm. McDonagh, Merrickville, has been appointed to Father Carson's place at Merrickville.

The body of Frederick Ruch, aged 45, was pulled out of the slip at the foot of Princess street yesterday. He was a deckhand on the steamer Prince Rupert and was walking along the wharf to his boat late Wednesday night and fell in. His wife lives in Toronto.

EVADES THE QUESTION

Sir James Whitney Is Not Fair on School Issue

ROWELL AT ST. THOMAS

St. Thomas, Dec. 8.—N. W. Rowell spoke here last night. The audience filled the Grand Opera House, many persons standing, and the hearing given the provincial Liberal leader was keenly appreciative.

"Sir James Whitney has mistaken his own bluster for courage; he is evasive in the face of a difficult question, declared Mr. Rowell, in the course of his address last night in the Grand Opera House here, when dealing with the bilingual school question.

"What is the condition,' he asked, "with reference to bilingual schools Sir James says there are none. Mr. Hanna, at his nomination meeting the other day, said there are 300 bilingual schools in Ontario. Mr. Foy says that under the law there can be no such thing, and if there are any they must cease to exist. Dr. Beaume says Mr. Foy speaks only for himself, while he professes to give Sir James Whitney's own opinion in saying there are bilingual schools in Ontario in which the teachers are entitled to use the French language for purposes of instruction, if need be, and when parents and trustees desire it to teach French as one of the school subjects. If Sir James sides with Mr. Foy he thinks Dr. Reaume will lose the French-Canadian vote, which is influential in some places; while if he sides with Dr. Reaume he knows it will lose Mr. Foy several vote in a strong Orange and Protestant constituency. Is that honest? Is that straightforward dealing? Is that fair and honorable conduct for the Prime Minister of this province? Some of his Conservative friends have told me they were shocked at his utterances. They say he must have known that there are such schools."

PROMISES LINES.

Whitney Says T. & N. O. Will Have Many Branches.

Orillia, Dec. 8.—That the spur line which the T. & N.O. Railway intends to build to Elk Lake next summer, as announced Wednesday by J. L. Englehart, chairman of the commission, is only the initial step in a series of spur lines reaching right and left along the whole route of the main line of the T. & N. O., and tapping that part of the province with a chain of Government railway extensions was definitely stated by Sir James Whitney last night. "The plans contemplated would," said the Premier, "go a long way towards opening up the entire northern part of the province for settlement."

The opera house was jammed to the doors, and dozens of people crowded into the aisles and stood on the backs of seats to get a view of the platform.

Sir James was particularly emphatic in commending the investigations that were being made previous to formulating the Ontario act for compensating injured workmen. "I have no doubt that we will get the best compensation for injured workmen act of any country in the world," said Sir James, after explaining that Chief Justice Meredith was investigating similar acts of compensation in different countries.

Sir James referred to the T. & N. O. Railway as the living link that connects the transcontinental Grand Trunk Pacific with the railways of old Ontario going to the tide waters and thence to the Old Land.

The Premier then referred to the numerous spur lines which were contemplated and of which the one which would be run to Elk Lake next summer was the first.

Fight To a Finish.

London, Dec. 8.—At the opening at Bootle, Lancashire, last night of the Unionist campaign against home rule, the Opposition leader, Andrew Bonar Law, said that his party had determined to fight the proposal to the last gasp. Many people, he said, favored home rule because they were tired to death of the Irish problem and glad to see it out of the way. The duty of the Unionists was to convince them that it would bring Ireland no peace, but the sword. Ireland wanted less politics and more industry. Mr. Redmond and his friends were promising Ireland more politics and less industry.

They were wise in trying to get home rule while they could, continued the speaker. This was their last chance, as every year the demand for it was diminishing in Ireland. Another ten years and the agitation will have died out. He declared that it was utterably impossible to pass the bill in this Parliament.

Must Protect Falls.

Washington, Dec. 8.—"Vandalism will continue until checked, unless a national reservation is established at Niagara Falls," declares a report which President Taft yesterday sent to Congress from the committee for regulation and control of the waters of the Niagara River and the preservation of Niagara Falls. The report tells of many improvements accomplished, but declares that the committee has been powerless to cope with deplorable conditions on the American side, north of the falls.

"Apparently," it is asserted, "the situation is beyond control, except through the creation of the national reservation recommended in the 55th Congress."

QUALITY, SKILL & CARE.
THE LABOUR BY WHICH WE CARRY
To Those Requiring Glasses
Eight years is a short time in the life of man, but it is a period of sufficient length, in business, to carry with it a guarantee of honest effort and satisfaction.
For this number of years I have carried on an Optical business in this city and I have fitted thousands of people with glasses. The fact that I have been successful leads me to believe that my methods are right and for that reason, I wish to give you the additional assurance that there will be no change in them in the future. I am in a position to give you the best of everything that means eye comfort.
It is rarely possible that you are in need of new lenses, frames or eye-glasses and I would ask that you give me the privilege of giving your eyes a scientific examination, and of providing the glasses for you if you need them.
I exercise the greatest care in the examination and fitting of the glasses. I do not overlook the feature of making glasses which will add prestige to the personal appearance of those who wear them. In other words, every detail will have my most careful consideration.
I carry the largest up-to-date Optical Stock in Peterboro, and grind all my own lenses. You will incur no obligation by calling and consulting with me.

Ship Broker a Spy?

Leipsic, Saxony, Dec. 8.—The trial of the English ship broker, Max Schultz, and his four German associates, who were arrested at Hamburg on March 18, on a charge of espionage, began here yesterday before the imperial court.

Max Schultz is accused of having used his profession as a cover for corrupting shipyard workmen to betray naval secrets. He was kept under close observation for a considerable time by Government detectives while passing between Hamburg and Bremen, where at the time ten warships of different types were under construction.

It is said that the incriminating material found in his possession at the time of his arrest was not of a grave character, but it is believed that he succeeded in communicating a number of documents to the people by whom he was employed. He is regarded by the naval authorities as a most dangerous espionage agent.

The proceedings are taking place in secret.

Brantford's New P.O.

Brantford, Dec. 8.—George Ross, postoffice superintendent, and C. H. Hunter, Public Works Department, were here yesterday looking over sites for Brantford's proposed new postoffice. An official report will be submitted and it is confidently expected this city will secure the new Government buildings. The late Government offered to provide a new building if the city provided a site, but nothing materialized. The Borden Government is being urged to expropriate a building site for that purpose.

Montreal 'Phone Users Satisfied?

Montreal, Dec. 8.—According to City Attorney Archambault, little interest is being taken by users of telephones in the civic petition now before the Board of Railway Commissioners to order telephone rates lowered. Only fifteen complaints have been filed, and in view of the thousands of telephones in use in the city, the attorney hardly thinks that the board will act on such meagre evidence.

Graham Fund Availed Not.

Brockville, Dec. 8.—The publication of the election returns of the two candidates of the Brockville riding in the recent Dominion campaign shows that the Hon. G. P. Graham's exceeded those of John Webster, nearly three to one, and yet he was defeated. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals spent $2,196 and his successful opponent only $804.

Must Pay Italian $1,500.

Belleville, Dec. 8.—An Italian named Youne, employed on the Trent Valley Canal, received a verdict for $1,500 for the loss of a thumb and a broken arm from the premature blast of dynamite. It was alleged the contractors, Deanon & Rogers, were negligent in the matter.

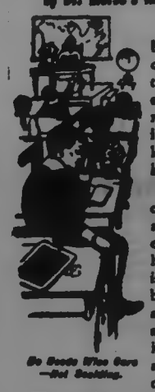
Listless, Backward Children

Made Bright and Active by Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills



So Steele Wise Cure —Not Smoking.

Many a growing boy or girl is set down as constitutionally slow, stupid or lazy when it is really a question of inactive bowels, lazy liver or sluggish kidneys.

The growing child, with a hearty appetite, certainly cannot long remain healthy and bright if the sewers of the body, the bowels and the kidneys, are choked up with impurities that should be thrown off promptly.

The muddy complexion, dragging limbs and dislike for mental or physical effort show plainly that the child needs Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills to stir up the liver and kidneys and regulate the bowels. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills do this most effectively, cleansing the whole system, purifying the blood, aiding the digestion and giving plenty of life and activity. As upon the education obtained may depend the success in life of your boy or girl—see to it that the general health of the child is such that study is pleasure and not a hardship.

Made from roots and herbs by W. H. Comstock Co., Ltd., at Brockville, and sold by all dealers at 25c. a box. 5

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

Heneage's face darkened. He clenched his fist, but recovered himself with a visible ecort.

"Yes!" he answered shortly, "he is about. He is everywhere. The little brute haunts me! He dogs my footsteps, Wrayson. Sometimes I wonder that I don't sweep him off the face of the earth."

"But why?" Wrayson asked. "What does he want with you?"

"I will tell you," Heneage answered. "When he first turned up, I was interested in his story, as you know. We commenced working at the thing together. You understand, Wrayson?"

"Perfectly!"

"Well—after a while it suited me—to drop it. Perhaps I told him so a little abruptly. At any rate, he was disappointed. Now he has got an idea in his brain. He believes that I have discovered something which I will not tell him. He follows me about. He pesters me to death. He is a slave to that one idea—a hideous, almost unnatural craving to get his hands on the source of his brother's money. I think that he will very soon be mad. To tell you the truth, I came in here to-night because I thought I should be safe from him. I don't believe he has five shillings to get in the place."

Wrayson lit a cigarette and smoked for a moment in silence. Then he turned towards his companion.

"Heneage," he said, "I don't want to annoy you, but you must remember that this matter means a good deal to me. I am forced to ask you a question, and you must answer it. Have you really found anything out? You don't often give a thing up without reason."

Heneage answered him with greater composure than he had expected, though perhaps to less satisfactory effect.

"Look here, Wrayson," he said, "you appreciate plain speaking, don't you?"

Wrayson nodded. Heneage continued:

"You can go to hell with your questions! You understand that? It's plain English!"

"Admirably simple," Wrayson answered, "and perfectly satisfactory."

"What do you mean?"

"It answers my question," Wrayson declared quietly.

Heneage shrugged his shoulders.

"You can get what satisfaction you like out of it," he said doggedly.

"It isn't much," Wrayson admitted. "I wish I could induce you to treat me a little more generously."

Heneage looked at him with a curious gleam in his eyes.

"Look here," he said. "Take my advice. Drop the whole affair. You see what it's made of me. It'll do the same to you. I shan't tell you anything! You can swear to that. I've done with it, Wrayson, done with it! You understand that? Talk about something else, or leave me alone!"

Wrayson looked at the man whom he had once called his friend.

"You're in a queer sort of mood, Heneage," he said.

"Let it go at that," Heneage answered. "Every man has a right to his moods, hasn't he? No right to inflict them upon his friends, you'd say! Perhaps not, but you know I'm a reasonable person as a rule. Don't—don't——"

He broke off abruptly in his sentence. His eyes were fixed upon a distant corner of the room. Their expression was unfathomable, but Wrayson shuddered as he looked away and followed their direction. Then he, too, started. He recognised the miserable little figure whose presence a group just broken up left revealed. Heneage rose softly to his feet.

"Let us go before he sees us," he whispered hurriedly. "Look sharp!"

But they were too late. Already he was on his way towards them, shambling rather than walking down the room, an unwholesome, unattractive, even repulsive figure. He seemed to have shrunken in size since his arrival in England, and his brother's clothes, always too large, hung about him loose and ungraceful. His tie was grimy; his shirt frayed; his trousers turned up, but still falling over his heels; his hat, too large for him, came almost to his ears. In the increased pallor and thinness of his face, his dark eyes seemed to have come nearer together. He would have been a ludicrous object but for the intense earnestness of his expression. He came towards them with rapidly blinking eyes. He took no notice of Heneage, but he insisted upon shaking hands with Wrayson.

"Mr. Wrayson," he said, "I am glad to see you again, sir. You always treated me like a gentleman. Not like him," he added, motioning with his head towards Heneage. "He's a thief, he is!"

"Steady," Wrayson interrupted, "you mustn't call people names like that."

"Why not?" Barnes asked. "He is a thief. He knows it. He knows who robbed me of my brother's money. And he won't tell. That's what I call being a thief."

Wrayson glanced towards Heneage, and was amazed at his demeanour. He had shrunk back in his chair, and he was sitting with his hands in his pockets and his eyes fixed upon the table. Of the two, his miserable little accuser was the dominant figure.

"He's very likely spending it now—my money!" Barnes continued. "Here am I living on crusts and fourpenny dinners, and begging my way in here, and some one else is spending my money. Never mind! It may be my turn yet! It may be only a matter of hours," he added, leaning over towards them and showing his yellow teeth, "and I may have the laugh of both of you."

Heneage looked up quickly. He was obviously discomposed.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

Sydney Barnes indulged in the graceless but expressive proceeding of sticking his tongue in his cheek. After which he turned to Wrayson.

"Mr. Wrayson," he said, "lend me a quid. I've got the flat to sleep in for a few more weeks, but I haven't got money enough for a meal. I'll pay you back some day—perhaps before you expect it."

Wrayson produced a sovereign and handed it over silently.

"If I were you," he said, "I'd spend my time looking for a situation, instead of hunting about for this supposed fortune of your brother's."

Barnes took the sovereign with hot trembling fingers, and deposited it carefully in his waistcoat pocket. Then he smiled in a somewhat mysterious manner.

"Mr. Wrayson," he said, "perhaps I'm not so far off, after all. Other people can find out what he knows," he added, pointing at Heneage. "He ain't the only one who can see through a brick wall. Say, Mr. Wrayson, you've always treated me fair and square," he added, leaning towards him and dropping his voice. "Can you tell me this? Did Morry ever go swaggering about calling himself by any other name—bit more toney, eh?"

Wrayson started. For a moment he did not reply. Thoughts were rushing through his brain. Was he forestalled in his search for this girl? Meanwhile, Barnes watched him with a cunning gleam in his deep-set eyes.

"Such as Augustus Howard, eh? Real toney name that for Morry!"

Wrayson, with a sudden instinctive knowledge, brushed him on one side, and half standing up, gazed across the room at the corner from which his questioner had come. With her back against the wall, her cheap prettiness marred by her red eyes, her ill-arranged hair, and tawdry hat, sat, beyond a doubt, the girl for whom he had waited in the promenade.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Wrayson drew a little breath and looked back at Sydney Barnes.

"You asked me a question," he said. "I believe I have heard of your brother calling himself by some such name."

Barnes grasped him by the arm.

"Look here," he said, "come and repeat that to the young lady over here. She's with me. It won't do you any harm."

Wrayson rose to his feet, but before he could move he felt Heneage's hand fall upon his arm.

"Where are you going, Wrayson?" he asked.

Barnes looked up at him anxiously. "You've done me enough harm, you have. You let Mr. Wrayson pass. He's coming with me."

Heneage took no more notice of him than he would of a yapping terrier. He looked over his head into Wrayson's eyes.

"Wrayson," he said, "don't have anything more to do with this business. Take my advice. I know more than you do about it. If you go on, I swear to you that there is nothing but misery at the end."

"I know more than you think I do," Wrayson answered quietly. "I know more indeed than you have any idea of. If the end were in hell I should not hold back."

Heneage hesitated for a moment. He stood there with darkening face, an obstinate, almost a threatening figure. Passers-by looked with a gleam of interest at the oddly assorted trio, whose conversation was obviously far removed from the ordinary chatter of the loungers about the place. One or two made an excuse to linger by—it seemed possible that there might be developments. Heneage, however, disappointed them. He turned suddenly upon his heel and left the room. Those who had the curiosity to follow along the corridor saw him, without glancing to the right or to the left, descend the stairs and walk out of the building. He had the air of a man who abandons finally a hopeless task.

The look of relief in Barnes' face as he saw him go was a ludicrous thing. He drew Wrayson at once towards the corner.

"Queer thing about this girl," he whispered in his ear. "She ain't like the others about here. She just comes to make inquiries about a friend who's given her the chuck, and whose name she says was Howard. I believe it's Morry she means. Just like him to take a toff's name!"

"Wait a moment before we speak to her," Wrayson said. "How did you find her out?"

"She spoke to me," Barnes answered. "Asked me if my name was Howard, said I was a bit like the man she was looking for. Then I palled up to her, and I'm pretty certain Morry was her man. I want her to go to the flat with me and see his clothes and picture, but she's scared. Mr. Wrayson, you might do me a good turn. She'll come if you'd go too!"

"Do you know why I am here to-night?" Wrayson asked.

"No! Why?"

"To meet that young woman of yours," Wrayson answered.

Barnes looked at him in amazement.

"What do you mean?" he asked quickly. "You don't know her, do you?"

His sallow cheeks were paler than ever. His narrow eyes, furtively raised to Wrayson's, were full of inquisitive fear.

"No! I don't know her," Wrayson answered, "but I rather fancy, all the same, that she is the young person whom I came here to meet to-night."

Barnes waited breathlessly for an explanation. He did not say a word, but his whole attitude was an insistent interrogation point.

"You remember," Wrayson said, "that when you and I were pursuing these investigations together, I made some inquiries of the woman at whose flat your brother called on the night of his murder. I saw here again at Dinant yesterday, and she told me of this young person. She also evidently believed that the man for whom she was inquiring was your brother."

Barnes nodded.

"She told me that she was to have met a gentleman to-night," he said. "Here, we must go and speak to her now, or she'll think that something's up."

He performed something that was meant for an introduction.

"Friend of mine, Miss," he said, indicating Wrayson. "Knew my brother well, lived in the flat just below him, in fact. Perhaps you'd like to ask him a few questions."

"There is only one question I want answered," the girl replied, with straining eyes fixed upon Wrayson's face, and a little break in her tone. "Shall I see him again? If Augustus was really—his brother—where is he? What has happened to him?"

There was a moment's silence. Sydney Barnes had evidently said nothing as to his brother's tragic end. Wrayson could see, too, that the girl was on the brink of hysterics, and needed careful handling.

"We will tell you everything," he said presently. "But first of all we have to decide whether your Augustus Howard and Morris Barnes were the same person. I think that the best way for you to decide this would be to come home to my flat. Mr. Barnes' is just above, and I dare say you can recognize some of his brother's belongings, if he really was—your friend."

She rose at once. She was perfectly willing to go. They left the place together and entered a four-wheeler. During the drive she scarcely opened her lips. She sat in a corner looking absently out of the window, and nervously clasping and unclasping her hands. She answered a remark of Sydney Barnes' without turning her head.

"I always watch the people," she said. "Wherever I am, I always look out of the window. I have always hoped—that I might see Augustus again that way."

Psoriasis Was Cured

After Five Years of Suffering ---Three Doctors Failed and Said Case Was Incurable

Itching and Burning Was Terrible Until Relief and Cure Was Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Psoriasis is another name for chronic eczema. It is the worst form of this dreadful itching skin disease. Once eczema has reached this stage it is usually considered incurable.

But here is a case which proves again the wonderful healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Not only does relief come quickly, but the resulting benefits are thorough and lasting.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon Ont., writes: "I thought it my duty to write you telling you the great benefit I received from using Dr Chase's Ointment. For five years I suffered with what three doctors called Psoriasis. I doctored with three different doctors, with no good results and one of our noted doctors told me if any one offered to guarantee me a cure for $50.00 to keep my money in my pocket, as I could not be cured.

"The disease spread all over me even on my face and head. The itching and burning was hard to bear. At last my brother read in the paper about Dr. Chase's Ointment as a healer. I got 8 boxes, and I am glad to say I am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise the ointment enough, and you are at liberty to use my testimony as I hope thereby to induce other sufferers to try the same."

NOT ONE WOMAN IN TWENTY HAS A STRONG BACK.

THE KIDNEYS ARE TO BLAME NINE TIMES OUT OF TEN.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

The poisons that ought to be carried off are sent back into the blood, taking with them a multitude of aches and pains. There is no use of expecting relief until the kidneys are restored to health.

Doan's Kidney Pills are the quickest and most reliable remedy. Mrs. Ed. Barter, Upham, N.B., writes:—"I take a good deal of pleasure in telling you what Doan's Kidney Pills have done for me. I was troubled with my kidneys for a number of years, and my back was so lame I could not sweep the floor. A friend of mine advised me to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and after using three boxes I am as well as ever. I highly recommend them to anyone suffering from lame back or kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box, or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

IMPERIAL SCENE AT DELHI DURBAR

That Which Will Greet King Geoge and Queen Mary is Without Parallel

An English correspondent describ-ed the preparations for the Coronation Durbar at Delhi as follows:

"The vast encampment lies below me as I write, visible almost in its entirety. All the more important the Emperor's camp, which is placed immediately below the Flagstaff Tower and lies at the west of Ridge, with only a roadway between it and the famous red sandstone outcrop, which has seen the building of so many Delhis and the rise and fall of so many dynasties.

"In the centre of the King's camp rises the Circuit House, built by Lord Curzon for the 1903 Durbar. This is a building of some size and importance, and has not been altered, nor enlarged for the Imperial visit, as both the Emperor and Empress prefer to live in tents.

"Its room however have been thoroughly overhauled, decorated, and furnished, in order that it may serve as a comfortable resort in the event of bad weather, during the Durbar. Lady Hardinge has devoted much time and attention to this work, and painteres and plasterers are hard at work—a rather anomalous sight in this canvas metropolis, for there are no other solidly-built structures in the whole extent of the encampment, except the telegraph and post offices.

"In front of the Circuit House, which has been painted a dazzling white for the occasion, the Emperor's and Empress's own tents have been pitched. Externally, except for their greater size, they are not markedly different from the others in the vicinity. But Lady Hardinge is sparing no effort to furnish them throughout with every comfort. Carpet and rugs have been specially woven for the entire suite, and many valuable hangings, pictures and ornaments have been lent for their adornment. Besides the private Imperial tents rise great canvas halls, to be used for official receptions and dinners. In front is the huge Shamiana, behind it a long-closed-in tent, which, when required, can be opened into the Shamiana. It may give some idea of the scale on which the preparations are being made at Delhi to mention that the space thus covered is between 24,000 and 25,000 square feet. The dome of St. Peter's at Rome covers a little more than 15,000 square feet, and that of St. Paul's less than 9,000.

"On the other side of the Shamiana are the Viceroy's tents, and in front of the whole is a wide lawn, with well-filled flowerbeds. The entire extent of the Emperor's Camp is 250,000 square yards. It is, of course, the largest single camp here, but it takes up an infinitesimal proportion of the entire encampment, which stretches out a white wilderness to the horizon slashed and dotted with green lawns, polo grounds, and avenues of trees, where watercourses and roads thread their way.

The Shamiana, at which the Emperor will alight, and under which he will receive the homage of the officials and greater ruling chiefs will be supported on richly-chased gold pillars. The velvet hangings are of a peculiarly rich shade, between cardinal and crimson, heavily embroidered with gold. Here the first part of the ceremony will take place, their Majesties afterwards proceeding to the central marble pavilion, which is also magnificently draped with velvet of a similar color. It may safely be prophesied that the scene when the Emperor and Empress present themselves to the peoples of India, gathered at Delhi on Dec. 12, will surpass not only other Royal or Imperial scenes that live in English history, but will have no parallel even in the most splendid days of the mogul emperors."

LAUGHING AT IMPURITY

No Chances Will be Taken With the Water in the Chateau Laurier.

In connection with the "Chateau Trunk Hotel at Ottawa, it has been decided to establish an ice freezing plant, and the Forbes System of sterilization. This means that every drop of water that comes into the hotel for any purpose is first filtered twice, then sterilized and cooled, rendering it not only absolutely pure from all sanitary standpoints, but clear and free from any coloration. As regards ice, the water from which it is made will be first filtered twice, then converted into steam, then condensed and frozen, rendering the ice not only absolutely pure but a beautiful clear transparent crystal.

SALMON NURSERY

The Largest in the World is in British Columbia.

From the Fisheries Department of the Dominion Government, whose duty it is to replenish the Canadian rivers with the commercial varieties of fish, come some interesting facts concerning fish-hatching. The work is carried out by a series of points both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the Great Lakes.

The largest of these—indeed, it is said to be the largest of its kind in the world—is the hatchery at Harrison Lake, drained by the Fraser River in British Columbia, which deals exclusively with the hatching of salmon. There are always 10,000,000 fish in the building—7,000,000 sockaye salmon eggs and fry (the fish principally used for canning purposes), and 3,000,000 spring salmon.

The building contains 160 hatching troughs, each averaging 90,000 fish. During September and October the eggs of the female are expressed into a pan and the fertilising "milt" of the male thoroughly mixed with them. The eggs are then carried to the hatchery and placed in troughs set in flowing water.

When ready to be liberated the fish are placed in a specially-constructed semi-submerged boat. This is towed to a chosen spot, and when in proper position is allowed to sink below the water.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CIGARETTE PAPER.

Of the great army of cigarette smokers there is probably not more than one in a hundred who knows that rice paper, in which the tobacco is wrapped, has nothing to do with rice, but is made from the membranes of the breadfruit tree, or, more commonly, of fine new trimmings of flax and hemp. So light is this paper that 500 of the tiny sheets go to make an ounce (says "Science Siftings"). They are perfectly combustible, and give off the minimum of smoke.

RICHARD BLAIN, M.P. Peel. He is one of the veterans of the Commons.

CURIOUS MEDLEY IN IN DEAD LETTER OFFICE

Accumulation Includes Cheques for $632,398 and $21,713 in Money.

A great collection of valuables and curiosities was made by the dead letter office at Ottawa during the year.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT

The Duke of Connaught is of a very different type from any that may be found in this country. In material things he has, of course, every reward. He is a man of wealth. Money considerations are apart from his existence. And this is all the greater a reason why such a man might be expected to long for reward in the shape of public credit or even a modicum of glory. The Duke of Connaught has worked, without hope, and without desire, for any other reward than the knowledge that his duty has been done, that he has played the game. The Duke of Connaught was an instrument in his brother's hands. He is to-day an instrument in the hands of the British Government and of his nephew, the King. He commands almost everything that man can ask. The only appetite that might remain unsatisfied is that very human appetite for publicity, but even this, the new Governor-General avoids. If he does a thing which is accounted good, it is sufficient for him to know it, and as few other as possible. The Duke of Connaught lacks some of the qualities which made his late brother so truly Parisian. He is inclined to be precise, and to be very rigid in the matter of details. There is, in his opinion, a right way and a wrong way for the doing of all things, and he insists upon the right way. He knows how every officer should wear his uniform. He knows how decorations should be worn, and he is quite apt to tell a man who is wrong with his medal, if occasion should arise.

The telling would not, of course, be done in a manner that would embarrass the officer, nor that would humiliate him even to himself, but with the tact which distinguishes Connaught, and which marks him everywhere as the brother of the late King Edward. Officially he is a figurehead with a great amount of theoretical power which he would scarcely dare to use. But unofficially he is one of the most influential men in the British Empire. So much weight attaches to his advice when he gives it, or to his recommendations, that Canada may well look to see results of his governor-generalship in the relations between this country and the Mother Country. He is a keen student of men and affairs. No one will have a better conception of Canada and Canadian needs than will the Duke of Connaught at the end of his term, and no one will have greater influence in the shaping of suitable Imperial policies.

A MAGNIFICENT COUNTRY

A letter received from one of the prominent artists of New York, who has just returned from a trip to the Canadian Rockies, contains the following: "I went out to the end of steel on the Grand Trunk Pacific, then took the trail over to Maligne Lake, which I found to be the most beautiful lake I ever saw in my life. I had a delightful trip, and made several sketches. Returning I stopped off at Wainwright, and from there went out duck shooting in different directions, and had a most delightful time. Next year I hope to be able to get away earlier and see more of your magnificent country."

A LOVERS' QUARREL

"Hello, Chumley, where did you get that black eye?"

"Oh, only a lovers' quarrel."

"A lovers' quarrel! You don't mean to say your girl did that to you?"

"Oh, no! It was her old lover, I mean."

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. IMPERIAL SCENE AT DELHI DURBAR

That Which Will Greet King Geoge and Queen Mary is Without Parallel

An English correspondent describ ed the preparations for the Coronation Durbar at Delhi as follows:

"The vast encampment lies below me as I write, visible almost in its entirety. All the more important the Emperor's camp, which is placed immediately below the Viceroy's Tower and lies at the west of Ridge, with only a roadway between it and the famous red sandstone outcrop, which has seen the building of so many Delhis and the rise and fall of so many dynasties.

"In the centre of the King's camp rises the Circuit House, built by Lord Curzon for the 1903 Durbar. This is a building of some size and importance, and has not been altered, nor enlarged for the Imperial visit, as both the Emperor and Empress prefer to live in tents.

"Its room however have been thoroughly overhauled, decorated, and furnished, in order that it may serve as a comfortable resort in the event of bad weather, during the Durbar. Lady Hardinge has devoted much time and attention to this work, and painters and plasterers are hard at work—a rather anomalous sight in this canvas metropolis, for there are no other solidly-built structures in the whole extent of the encampment, except the telegraph and post offices.

"In front of the Circuit House, which has been painted a dazzling white for the occasion, the Emperor's and Empress's own tents have been pitched. Externally, except for their greater size, they are not markedly different from the others in the vicinity. But Lady Hardinge is sparing no effort to furnish them throughout with every comfort. Carpet and rugs have been specially woven for the entire suite, and many valuable hangings, pictures and ornaments have been lent for their adornment. Besides the private Imperial tents rise great canvas halls, to be used for official receptions and dinners. In front is the huge Shamiana, behind it a long-closed-in tent, which, when required, can be opened into the Shamiana. It may give some idea of the scale on which the preparations are being made at Delhi to mention that the space thus covered is between 24,000 and 25,000 square feet. The dome of St. Peter's at Rome covers a little more than 15,000 square feet, and that of St. Paul's less than 9,000.

"On the other side of the Shamiana are the Viceroy's tents, and in front of the whole is a wide lawn, with well-filled flowerbeds. The entire extent of the Emperor's Camp is 250,000 square yards. It is, of course, the largest single camp here, but it takes up an infinitesimal proportion of the entire encampment, which stretches out a white wilderness to the horizon slashed and dotted with green lawns, polo grounds, and avenues of trees, where watercourses and roads thread their way.

The Shamiana, at which the Emperor will alight, and under which he will receive the homage of the officials and greater ruling chiefs will be supported on richly-chased gold pillars. The velvet hangings are of a peculiarly rich shade, between cardinal and crimson, heavily embroidered with gold. Here the first part of the ceremony will take place, their Majesties afterwards proceeding to the central marble pavilion, which is also magnificently draped with velvet of a similar color. It may safely be prophesied that the scene when the Emperor and Empress present themselves to the peoples of India, gathered at Delhi on Dec. 12, will surpass not only other Royal or Imperial scenes that live in English history, but will have no parallel even in the most splendid days of the mogul emperors."

LAUGHING AT IMPURITY

No Chances Will be Taken With the Water in the Chateau Laurier.

In connection with the "Chateau Trunk Hotel at Ottawa, it has been decided to establish an ice freezing plant, and the Forbes System of sterilization. This means that every drop of water that comes into the hotel for any purpose is first filtered twice, then sterilised and cooled, rendering it not only absolutely pure from all sanitary standpoints, but clear and free from any coloration. As regards ice, the water from which it is made will be first filtered twice, then converted into steam, then condensed and frozen, rendering the ice not only absolutely pure but a beautiful clear transparent crystal.

SALMON NURSERY

The Largest in the World is in British Columbia.

From the Fisheries Department of the Dominion Government, whose duty it is to replenish the Canadian rivers with the commercial varieties of fish, come some interesting facts concerning fish-hatching. The work is carried out by a series of points both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the Great Lakes.

The largest of these—indeed, it is said to be the largest of its kind in the world—is the hatchery at Harrison Lake, drained by the Fraser River in British Columbia, which deals exclusively with the hatching of salmon. There are always 10,000,000 fish in the building—7,000,000 sockeye salmon eggs and fry (the fish principally used for canning purposes), and 3,000,000 spring salmon.

The building contains 160 hatching troughs, each averaging 90,000 fish. During September and October the eggs of the female are expressed into a pan and the fertilizing "milt" of the male thoroughly mixed with them. The eggs are then carried to the hatchery and placed in troughs set in flowing water.

When ready to be liberated the fish are placed in a specially-constructed semi-submerged boat. This is towed to a chosen spot, and when in proper position is allowed to sink below the water.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CIGARETTE PAPER.

Of the great army of cigarette smokers there is probably not more than one in a hundred who knows that rice paper, in which the tobacco is wrapped, has nothing to do with rice, but is made from the membranes of the breadfruit tree, or, more commonly, of fine new trimmings of flax and hemp. So light is this paper that 500 of the tiny sheets go to make an ounce (says "Science Siftings"). They are perfectly combustible, and give off the minimum of smoke.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT

The Duke of Connaught is of a very different type from any that may be found in this country. In material things he has, of course, every reward. He is a man of wealth. Money considerations are apart from his existence. And this is all the greater a reason why such a man might be expected to long for reward in the shape of public credit or even a modicum of glory. The Duke of Connaught has worked, without hope, and without desire, for any other reward than the knowledge that his duty has been done, that he has played the game. The Duke of Connaught was an instrument in his brother's hands. He is to-day an instrument in the hands of the British Government and of his nephew, the King. He commands almost everything that man can ask. The only appetite that might remain unsatisfied is that very human appetite for publicity, but even this, the new Governor-General avoids. If he does a thing which is accounted good, it is sufficient for him to know it, and as few other as possible. The Duke of Connaught lacks some of the qualities which made his late brother so truly Parisian. He is inclined to be precise, and to be very rigid in the matter of details. There is, in his opinion, a right way and a wrong way for the doing of all things, and he insists upon the right way. He knows how every officer should wear his uniform. He knows how decorations should be worn, and he is quite apt to tell a man who is wrong with his medal, if occasion should arise.

The telling would not, of course, be done in a manner that would embarrass the officer, nor that would humiliate him even to himself, but with the tact which distinguishes Connaught, and which marks him everywhere as the brother of the late King Edward. Officially he is a figurehead with a great amount of theoretical power which he would scarcely dare to use. But unofficially he is one of the most influential men in the British Empire. So much weight attaches to his advice when he gives it, or to his recommendations, that Canada may well look to see results of his governor-generalship in the relations between this country and the Mother Country. He is a keen student of men and affairs. No one will have a better conception of Canada and Canadian needs than will the Duke of Connaught at the end of his term, and no one will have greater influence in the shaping of suitable Imperial policies.

A MAGNIFICENT COUNTRY

A letter received from one of the prominent artists of New York, who has just returned from a trip to the Canadian Rockies, contains the following: "I went out to the end of steel on the Grand Trunk Pacific, then took the trail over to Maligne Lake, which I found to be the most beautiful lake I ever saw in my life. I had a delightful trip, and made several sketches. Returning I stopped off at Wainwright, and from there went out duck shooting in different directions, and had a most delightful time. Next year I hope to be able to get away earlier and see more of your magnificent country."

A LOVERS' QUARREL

"Hello, Chumley, where did you get that black eye?"

"Oh, only a lovers' quarrel."

"A lovers' quarrel! You don't mean to say your girl did that to you?"

"Oh, no! It was her old lover, I mean."

"MANSON"

(Short Story)

I knew Manson to be possessed of a vivid imagination, though never anticipating what its ultimate result would be. He and I were life-long acquaintances, and though circumstances had separated us for many years, we were still fast friends. He never passed entirely out of my mind by reason of his peculiar temperament. In fact, had I wished it, I could not have forgotten him, having on my face a scar, the result of our first meeting. We met in a matter of fact way; fishing one day in a brook, his line became entangled with mine. We quarrelled, and in a very short space of time I found myself lying on my back wondering what had happened. As is often the case, this quarrel was the cause of a lasting friendship, and the scar served as a souvenir in my later years.

Sometimes optimistic — sometimes pessimistic—Manson was a man of varying moods, and this may have been accounted for by his unusually sensitive nature. But the predominating trait in his character was his imagination.

The recent death of his mother, of whom he was exceedingly fond, affected him to a marked degree. Being an only child, he was now alone in the world, having been left fatherless in his early years. He took this to heart in such a manner as to become pitifully despondent. He badly needed some diversion. After much persuasion, therefore, I induced him to take a holiday.

We decided that our vacation should take the form of a tour, and made arrangements accordingly. We visited several of the large cities in the course of a week, and during this time he succeeded in maintaining a certain degree of light heartedness. At the end of this period we thought a day or two in the country would be a desirable change, and another day found us travelling through glorious County Kerry. Manson was delighted with its beauty, and intimated his intention, with my concurrence, to pass the remainder of the time at our disposal in that country.

After a tiring jaunt, we discovered situated in a quiet, secluded part of the country about a mile from the banks of a river, a little Inn, and on introducing ourselves to the Landlord, a portly personage with a rubicund countenance, learnt that he could accomodate us.

All went well for a couple of days, during which time our diversion consisted of walking, hunting and fishing. On third day, however, Manson's moroseness returned. Though exerting myself to the utmost, I could not prevent his thoughts returning to the cause of his chagrin. 'Tis true he was a tolerably decent companion during the day, but towards evening I might not have been aware of his existence.

I applied a match to the fire (the evenings becoming rather chilly) and we sat down at its side; he gazing into the flames and I, giving up hope of conversation, resigned myself to my pipe.

Dusk had fallen. The twittering of the birds had ceased, and the moon, throwing its rays broadcast upon the earth, cast shadows upon the walls of the room. We must have sat in this melancholy silence for half an hour, when suddenly, with an inarticulate cry, he sprang to his feet.

"Great Heaven, what's the matter!" I ejaculated.

"I thought I saw a face—her face—in the fire," he faltered, "but it's nothing! I am not myself to-night!

He sat down again and I noticed his uneasiness. He played with his fingers nervously. Only a few moments had elapsed, when he again rose, and muttering something to the effect that he "couldn't stay here," proposed a walk.

We set out towards the river. The night was still, and a mist had settled round the moon. We reached the river and walked along its marshy banks. The dank smell of the rotted vegetation filled our nostrils as we plodded on, regardless of our destination. Yet there was a certain charm about it all that savoured of romance ,yet heaven knows, it was no romance.

After walking some distance in this isolated silence, we came upon an old, rustic bridge, supported by half rotted wooden piles. In the cracks and joints of the worn and decayed planks, where the dust of years had accumulated, weeds had sprung, and portions of the wood had disappeared entirely. Several of the piles,, too, had loosened their hold, and protruded from the water in grim independence.

Manson, without hesitating, stepped on to the bridge.

"Hold hard, old man!" I exclaimed, "surely you are not going to risk your neck on this derelict."

"It's safe enough!" he answered, stubbornly, "let's take a walk on the other side of the stream."

In vain did I remonstrate with him. I even went so far as to use physical restraint, but with determined steps he bore onward ,and I, as if drawn by some irresistible force — yet with a vague sense of impending danger—followed him.

He had covered half the length of the bridge in safety, when I noticed in the centre of the bridge several planks were missing. Nothing daunt- One step—two steps—and, Gracious Heaven! the rotten planks parted in the middle.

There was but one plank remaining. I rushed madly forward, but had only covered half its length when Manson, without a murmur, fell backward, his head coming in contact with an outstanding pile with a sickening thud.

A short pause—a dull splash, and the river, closing over his body, continued its silent course.

BELLE'S TOOTHACHE

A Short Story

BY M. QUAD

There was Farmer Smythe and there was his wife, and there was the daughter, Belle. The latter had come to be 22 years old. She wasn't an angel or a sylph. She didn't have a high school education, and she couldn't sing and play. She was just a good-hearted, affectionate country girl who could make the nicest kind of buckwheat cakes in winter and turn out the finest soft soap in the spring.

Bell had a beau. She might have had half a dozen, but she discouraged all young men except Philip King, and Philip had been courting her for two years and had never approached the subject of matrimony. He was the hired man on the next farm, and had a tidy sum saved up, and when he was with men he had no lack of gab. It was when in the presence of women, and more particularly in that of Belle Smythe, that words failed him. It was his bashfulness.

Some young women would have brought that young man to time within six months, but Belle was also a little bashful, and she was patient and kind. Farmer Smythe had nothing to say, and all that Mrs. Smythe had to relate was: "Well, I hain't saying nothing except that an earthquake may come along some day and stir Philip up."

The earthquake came. Its name was Martha Manton, sister to Mrs. Smythe, and a widow. She saw Philip and approved of him. She saw the situation and didn't approve of it at all. She watched and waited for a couple of weeks, and then one June morning she said:

"Belle, come out into the orchard with me. I want to have a talk with you." And under the white and pink apple blossoms they talked—that is, the aunt did most of the talking, and Belle did all the blushing.

That evening when Philip "just dropped in for a minute" he found Belle was suffering from the toothache. He wanted to swim across Lake Erie to show her how he sympathised with her, but Lake Erie was 400 miles away. The Widow Manton was right on the spot, however, and she took Philip outdoors and said: "I'm mightily concerned about Belle and that toothache."

"But it's only toothache," he replied.

"Only! Only! Why, man don't you know that she may have lockjaw or brain fever or get paralyzed all over?"

"But what can I do?" he anxiously asked.

"H'm! You come in to-morrow night and I'll tell you. I'm hoping she won't die, but I dunno—I dunno. I saw a star fall last night, and that's a sure sign of death in the family."

"I—I hope not!" was the trembling reply, and Philip went home to toss about on his bed all night without a moment's sleep. The next day seemed a hundred years long to him, and as soon as he had finished the milking he set out on the run for the house of Smythe. It was Mrs. Manton who met him and said:

"That toothache is worse to-night, Philip. I'm afraid it's striking into Belle's system."

"You don't tell me!" he gasped.

"There's only one thing to be done—she must go to the dentist over at Charlotte to-morrow. She must be driven over in a buggy. She must be driven by somebody who is sympathetic. Her father isn't sympathetic, her mother is too nearsighted to drive and I feel one of my old-fashioned headaches coming on. Philip, you may have to go."

And Philip didn't go to bed at all that night. He just roamed around the farm and rayed for daylight to come. He was at the Smythe's farm as soon as he had finished breakfast, and the Widow Manton was at the door to meet him and say:

"Go home and dress up and come back, and by that time the horse and buggy will be ready. You have got to drive Belle over to Charlotte."

Philip was back in half an hour. Belle and the rig were ready. Belle had her good clothes on and a rag over her jaw.

"Look here, Philip," said the widow as he was ready to get into the buggy, "you must let Belle rest her head on your shoulder, and you must drive with one hand and keep an arm around her. Talk to her and keep her from thinking of the pain. Her life is in your hands."

Philip was shaking like a leaf, but he rose to the occasion. To his amazement the more he talked the higher he arose. He had hardly got through with the weather, the crops and Farmer Snowden losing a cow when all of a sudden he found himself saying:

"Belle, I'm going to drive straight to the preacher's first."

Belle pressed his arm.

"Yes, durn my buttons if I don't. Then, as your husband, I can punch the head off that dentist if he hurts you."

At the preacher's the rag came off. At the dentist's a small cavity was found in a tooth and filled. At the Smythe farmhouse, when the newly-weds returned the Widow Manton met them at the gate and exclaimed:

"For the land's sake! but here's Belle looking as chipper as a new tin pan, and Philip with a grin on him like a summer squash, and I'll just bet that something has went and gone and happened!"

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Dr. Andrew Macphail Speaks of Conditions in the Island Province

Some of the reasons for the depopulation of Prince Edward Island, and the efforts which will be made to offset it and re-establish the former industries, were recited to a Toronto audience by Dr. Andrew Macphail, of Charlottetown. He called attention to the fact that forty years ago there 94,000 people on the island. In 1881 there were 108,000, and in 1891 109,000. Then the population commenced to decline, and in ten years it had dropped to 103,000, and the last census showed that the population was only 93,000. The industries of the island also had largely disappeared, and it was proposed, in order to regenerate them, to apply to the island the same tariff system as was applied to the Domoinion as a whole, in order to protect the manufactories on the island. It was proposed also to have instead of a Minister of Politics, a Minister of Industries. The fact that both political parties were so strong, or so weak, also had much to do with the lack of development. Forty years ago the island contained more people than it did to-day, said Dr. Macphail, and there must be some reason for it in a province which was one of the best in the world, so far as agriculture was concerned.

In connections with transportation facilities, the speaker said it was possible to send goods from Montreal to Sydney, Cape Breton, the market for Prince Edward Island, for less than half what it cost to send goods from any point on the island to Sydney. Of the 72,000 people who had left the island in the last forty years, 58 per cent. had gone to the United States, and only 12 per cent. to the other provinces in the Dominion. How to get those back was the problem which was confronting the island, and it was thought that the best system would be to apply to the island the same tariff system as was applied to the Dominion as a whole, on the ground that what was good for the whole was good for the part. In the island great quantities of tobacco could be grown, and it was confidently hoped that in ten years no more tobacco would be imported.

There was such a malevolent expression on the face of the next arrival that the butcher felt quite alarmed.

"Look at this!" roared the wrathful one, placing a small object on the counter. "Look at it, and have the goodness to tell me what it is."

The butcher examined the article minutely.

"It appears to be a bit of brass," he replied.

"Exactly. That's what it is and I found it in the sausages you sold me this morning."

"In the sausages?"

"Yes, in the sausages. How do you explain that, eh?"

The butcher pondered.

"Pshaw," he said at last. "I expect I forgot to take his collar off."

"MANSON"

(Short Story)

I knew Manson to be possessed of a vivid imagination, though never anticipating what its ultimate result would be. He and I were life-long acquaintances, and though circumstances had separated us for many years, we were still fast friends. He never passed entirely out of my mind by reason of his peculiar temperament. In fact, had I wished it, I could not have forgotten him, having on my face a scar, the result of our first meeting. We met in a matter of fact way; fishing one day in a brook, his line became entangled with mine. We quarrelled, and in a very short space of time I found myself lying on my back wondering what had happened. As is often the case, this quarrel was the cause of a lasting friendship, and the scar served as a souvenir in my later years.

Sometimes optimistic — sometimes pessimistic—Manson was a man of varying moods, and this may have been accounted for by his unusually sensitive nature. But the predominating trait in his character was his imagination.

The recent death of his mother, of whom he was exceedingly fond, affected him to a marked degree. Being an only child, he was now alone in the world, having been left fatherless in his early years. He took this to heart in such a manner as to become pitifully despondent. He badly needed some diversion. After much persuasion, therefore, I induced him to take a holiday.

We decided that our vacation should take the form of a tour, and made arrangements accordingly. We visited several of the large cities in the course of a week, and during this time he succeeded in maintaining a certain degree of light heartedness. At the end of this period we thought a day or two in the country would be a desirable change, and another day found us travelling through glorious County Kerry. Manson was delighted with its beauty, and intimated his intention, with my concurrence, to pass the remainder of the time at our disposal in that country.

After a tiring jaunt, we discovered situated in a quiet, secluded part of the country about a mile from the banks of a river, a little Inn, and on introducing ourselves to the Landlord, a portly personage with a rubicund countenance, learnt that he could accomodate us.

All went well for a couple of days, during which time our diversion consisted of walking, hunting and fishing. On third day, however, Manson's moroseness returned. Though exerting myself to the utmost, I could not prevent his thoughts returning to the cause of his chagrin. 'Tis true he was a tolerably decent companion during the day, but towards evening I might not have been aware of his existence.

I applied a match to the fire (the evenings becoming rather chilly) and we sat down at its side; he gazing into the flames and I, giving up hope of conversation, resigned myself to my pipe.

Dusk had fallen. The twittering of the birds had ceased, and the moon, throwing its rays broadcast upon the earth, cast shadows upon the walls of the room. We must have sat in this melancholy silence for half an hour, when suddenly, with an inarticulate cry, he sprang to his feet.

"Great Heaven, what's the matter?" I ejaculated.

"I thought I saw a face—her face—in the fire," he faltered, "but it's nothing! I am not myself to-night!

He sat down again and I noticed his uneasiness. He played with his fingers nervously. Only a few moments had elapsed, when he again rose, and muttering something to the effect that he "couldn't stay here," proposed a walk.

We set out towards the river. The night was still, and a mist had settled round the moon. We reached the river and walked along its marshy banks. The dank smell of the rotted vegetation filled our nostrils as we plodded on, regardless of our destination. Yet there was a certain charm about it all that savoured of romance ,yet heaven knows, it was no romance.

After walking some distance in this isolated silence, we came upon an old, rustic bridge, supported by half rotted wooden piles. In the cracks and joints of the worn and decayed planks, where the dust of years had accumulated, weeds had sprung, and portions of the wood had disappeared entirely. Several of the piles, too, had loosened their hold, and protruded from the water in grim independence.

Manson, without hesitating, stepped on to the bridge.

"Hold hard, old man!" I exclaimed, "surely you are not going to risk your neck on this derelict."

"It's safe enough!" he answered, stubbornly, "let's take a walk on the other side of the stream."

In vain did I remonstrate with him. I even went so far as to use physical restraint, but with determined steps he bore onward ,and I, as if drawn by some irresistible force — yet with a vague sense of impending danger—followed him.

He had covered half the length of the bridge in safety, when I noticed in the centre of the bridge several planks were missing. Nothing daunt- One step—two steps—and, Gracious Heaven! the rotten planks parted in the middle.

There was but one plank remaining. I rushed madly forward, but had only covered half its length when Manson, without a murmur, fell backward, his head coming in contact with an outstanding pile with a sickening thud.

A short pause—a dull splash, and the river, closing over his body, continued its silent course.

BELLE'S TOOTHACHE

A Short Story

BY M. QUAD

There was Farmer Smythe and there was his wife, and there was the daughter, Belle. The latter had come to be 22 years old. She wasn't an angel or a sylph. She didn't have a high school education, and she couldn't sing and play. She was just a good-hearted, affectionate country girl who could make the nicest kind of buckwheat cakes in winter and turn out the finest soft soap in the spring.

Bell had a beau. She might have had half a dozen, but she discouraged all young men except Philip King, and Philip had been courting her for two years and had never approached the subject of matrimony. He was the hired man on the next farm, and had a tidy sum saved up, and when he was with men he had no lack of gab. It was when in the presence of women, and more particularly in that of Belle Smythe, that words failed him. It was his bashfulness.

Some young women would have brought that young man to time within six months, but Belle was also a little bashful, and she was patient and kind. Farmer Smythe had nothing to say, and all that Mrs. Smythe had to relate was: "Well, I hain't saying nothing except that an earthquake may come along some day and stir Philip up."

The earthquake came. Its name was Martha Manton, sister to Mrs. Smythe, and a widow. She saw Philip and approved of him. She saw the situation and didn't approve of it at all. She watched and waited for a couple of weeks, and then one June morning she said:

"Belle, come out into the orchard with me. I want to have a talk with you." And under the white and pink apple blossoms they talked—that is, the aunt did most of the talking, and Belle did all the blushing.

That evening when Philip "just dropped in for a minute" he found Belle was suffering from the toothache. He wanted to swim across Lake Erie to show her how he sympathised with her, but Lake Erie was 400 miles away. The Widow Manton was right on the spot, however, and she took Philip outdoors and said: "I'm mightily concerned about Belle and that toothache."

"But it's only toothache," he replied.

"Only! Only! Why, man don't you know that she may have lockjaw or brain fever or get paralyzed all over?"

"But what can I do?" he anxiously asked.

"H'm! You come in to-morrow night and I'll tell you. I'm hoping she won't die, but I dunno—I dunno. I saw a star fall last night, and that's a sure sign of death in the family."

"I—I hope not!" was the trembling reply, and Philip went home to toss about on his bed all night without a moment's sleep. The next day seemed a hundred years long to him, and as soon as he had finished the milking he set out on the run for the house of Smythe. It was Mrs. Manton who met him and said:

"That toothache is worse to-night, Philip. I'm afraid it's striking into Belle's system."

"You don't tell me!" he gasped.

"There's only one thing to be done—she must go to the dentist over at Charlotte to-morrow. She must be driven over in a buggy. She must be driven by somebody who is sympathetic. Her father isn't sympathetic, her mother is too nearsighted to drive and I feel one of my old-fashioned headaches coming on. Philip, you may have to go."

And Philip didn't go to bed at all that night. He just roamed around the farm and rayed for daylight to come. He was at the Smythe's farm as soon as he had finished breakfast, and the Widow Manton was at the door to meet him and say:

"Go home and dress up and come back, and by that time the horse and buggy will be ready. You have got to drive Belle over to Charlotte."

Philip was back in half an hour. Belle and the rig were ready. Belle had her good clothes on and a rag over her jaw.

WHERE UNCLE SAM IS HEAD OF THE FAMILY

UNIQUE Administration of the Pribilof Islands, Where Natives Depend Upon Him Even for Food and for Protection Against Japanese Seal Poachers.

Their Names Are Very Musical—Nadesda Orlof, Alexander Melovidoff, Marcia and Margaret Melovidoff and Nicolai Orlof. The Revenue Cutters Set Their Fashion in Dress.

WINTER sealskins worn by the woman of fashion amid the gayety and luxury of metropolitan life are obtained largely from the barren and desolate Pribilof Islands, sometimes called the Fur Seal Islands, which lie off the Alaskan coast, in the Behring Sea, in latitude 56 degrees 50 minutes north and longitude 170 degrees west. There are only four of the islands large enough to be habitable—St. Paul, St. George, Otter and Seal islands. Jean Snyd first sighted them in 1767, and in 1786 seals were discovered there by Gerassim Pribilof, a Russian. The United States acquired them with the purchase of Alaska and leases them to the North American Commercial Company. Although the islands have been the subject of international disputes over sealing rights, the life of the natives and government of the group, which are described in the following story, are known to very few Americans.

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

OUR government's dealings with some of its people are remarkably intimate. There are official reports which will show, for instance, not only when young Alexander Rooknavlshnikoff was born, but how long he went to school and when he had the mumps. It is of public record that Agrifina Bogudanof has $161.10 in the bank, and somewhere else is told how Portiri Pankoff got drunk. On another page one learns the local price of potatoes and onions, ginghams and bedspreads, trousers, tobacco, pocket knives, soap, shoes, and nearly anything else the family may need, as well as the sum of the paterfamilias' wages during the year.

This domestic information is to be found in reports of the government representative in a remote bit of the United States, where the government is not only owner and manager of all industry, but personal guardian of the people in the establishment. It is somewhat as if the Pullman Company, owning the land and houses of the town of Pullman, exercised legal jurisdiction over its residents, the Pullman employes, and guardianship of their temporal welfare besides. The little villages of St. Paul and St. George are the scene of the American fur seal industry, and this industry is a government monopoly. So peculiar are all the conditions surrounding it that its administration not only becomes a precedent in public policy with respect to natural resources but involves a curious human problem which entails other exceptional procedure. Nowhere in the world, probably, is just the counterpart of this diminutive domain.

About three hundred persons live on the Pribilof Islands, or rather on two of those five little bits of volcanic land, named respectively St. Paul and St. George Islands, but more commonly known as the Seal Islands. It was the pursuit of fur seals that led Pribilof, of a Russian trading vessel, into these undiscovered regions away back in 1786. It was because he must have laborers to help him kill and cure the skins of the seals from the new found rookeries that there came to be human inhabitants upon these desolate shores. All through the two hundred and twenty-four years since then the people of the Pribilof Islands have been merely an adjunct of the seal industry. Thus it is not remarkable that except to the government's representatives who are actively engaged with the affairs of the islands the "natives" appear but as part of the landscape.

This little handful of people has, however, a pathetically interesting history—pathetic because they are such an incident in the great world's life and are so completely the victims of circumstance. Two centuries ago most of the islands of the Alaskan coast were inhabited by the Aleuts, hardy hunters and fishermen of primitive but independent race. Then came the Russian explorers, who turned the skill of these simple people to their own profit. From Unalaska and Atka Pribilof gathered the little colony for his previously uninhabited islands, and when the United States acquired Alaska this isolated little group of Aleuts was living in virtual slavery.

The first step of American administration was to lease the sealing rights and provide for the future of the natives, who were made wards of the government, much like the Indians. But they were provided a compulsory occupation, the lessee being required to employ them at a specified wage. Of its own accord the lessee, the Alaska Commercial Company then, replaced with neat frame dwellings the native half-underground, sod roofed barrabaras, in which the Aleuts had depended for warmth upon crowding together and burning the ill smelling and stifling seal blubber.

Their filthy and unsanitary condition was further improved by the United States government, which provided staple foods in addition to the seal meat diet, gave them wood and coal to burn, furnished physicians and medicines, schools where English rudiments are taught, and churches of the island faith, the Russian Greek of the former masters. The beneficiaries of these measures continue to look back regretfully to their Russian days, after the manner of subject peoples. But the treatment they have experienced under American dominion has in a sense almost killed them with kindness.

The isolation and barrenness of the Pribilof Islands make the natives peculiarly helpless. The seals have long been the one local food resource, except birds and bird eggs from the cliffs. There is not a tree on the islands, and the climate permits scant vegetation of any sort. The waters are practically empty of fish. The walrus and sea otter long ago disappeared, and the few foxes are insufficient for clothing, even were not they, like the seals, withheld from the natives' use. The necessaries of life must be brought to the islands from elsewhere or there would be famine and want. Thus, though the government had provided a wage giving occupation, the earnings would be useless with nothing to buy. So a store had to be established, maintained first by the lessee, but now by the government itself, since the seal rights are no longer leased.

Credited with Their Wages.

But the simple Aleut islander was naturally no master at business, and to insure his welfare a system of control was adopted for the expenditure of his earnings. At forty cents a sealskin the native communities earned $40,000 a year, $133 per caput, which with their simple needs afforded a margin of savings. They were not paid in cash for their labor, but credited with the sum, which was to be drawn upon in the form of supplies from the store.

For the first twenty years the support of the Pribilof natives presented no serious problem. They are a faithful, obedient and industrious race, skilled and swift in their accustomed work. They are tractable and kind in disposition, and, though slower of head than of hand, they responded gratifyingly to the civilizing influences about them. The chief adverse factor was the long dark winter of idleness, for the seal work lasts through the summer only.

The seals, however, under the devastating slaughter of the pelagic hunters, were growing fewer and fewer in numbers. The second lessee, the North American Commercial Company, when it took over its privileges in 1890 was soon limited to 60,000 instead of 100,000 sealskins a year. An increase to fifty cents a skin for the native laborer left him still with a loss, and soon the calamitous limit of 15,000 skins was decreed, for the herd was disappearing fast. The natives were now paid $1 a skin, but their mere $15,000 a year left them facing starvation. There was nothing for it, apparently, but to supply the deficiency outright.

This Congress did in a yearly appropriation of $19,500. The arrangement continued for years, leaving the native no margin of funds and no voice in his own expenditures. His feeble self-reliance disappeared, he became childlike in his dependence. He has worked just as faithfully as ever, be it recorded to his credit, which not many men would do for no more pay than if they did nothing. That is what the condition amounted to. When a man's earnings were gone, exhausted in orders for supplies, the supplies were continued as before out of a fund furnished by the government. There was no incentive for the industrious man to do more than his idle neighbor, and none had to think for himself.

But here, of course, is the problem. For two hundred years confined to one occupation, the Aleut cannot leave his island and take chances elsewhere for a livelihood, he lacks the initiative to do so if he could. Yet there are not enough seals to afford him a living wage by any natural standard. The government has, however, so disposed its appropriation that there is no longer frankly an alms fund, but the money available will be apportioned in the form of wages raised in accordance with needs. The rate of pay, that is, instead of $1 a sealskin, will depend upon the number of seal skins taken. This year it proves to be about $3 a skin.

In the old scheme was pauperization the new one is but beating the devil around the stump. The standard of wages is necessarily purely fictitious, based on no law of supply and demand, but merely paternal allowance. And his guardian government will not now allow the lazy man to starve, any more than it did before. There is this advantage, however, that the thrifty will have some incentive. And this year's reports from the islands show that there are thrifty Aleuts. In amounts ranging from $400 to $1,000, thirty natives last year transferred to a San Francisco bank a total of $5,100, their savings from the earlier and more prosperous days.

Bird Eggs Collected from the Cliffs and Laid Out in Piles Apportioned to the Native Families

Breeding Seals

The administration of the natives' affairs, in addition to the duties of the seal work, is in the hands of the government agents. They serve as governors of the islands in the fullest sense, being responsible for external protection as well as internal order.

Their posts seem hardly inviting. The life lacks many material comforts, and means banishment from one's kind. St. Paul and St. George Islands are two hundred miles from any other land and are themselves forty miles apart. This year wireless telegraph equipment was installed, but heretofore for six or seven months of every year they have been cut off from all the world as well as from each other, and even in summer the only communication was by means of the revenue cutters. The cutters maintain a regular patrol, and they also bring the mail, once a month, until winter drives them southward. But after the last election it was six months before American citizens on the Pribilof Islands learned who was President of the United States.

Nor are the agents' duties simple. For them the seal work means not only personal direction of the killing, the skinning, weighing and counting of the skins, but observations of the seal herd. It must be a matter of record when and how many seals are here or there, and what their movements, behavior and condition are, just as the scientific observer and careful breeder watches his domestic stock. To manage the affairs of the natives means to apportion and bank their earnings, to be magistrate in their quarrels and dealings among themselves, sympathizer in their troubles, and general administrator of the village.

The general demands of all kinds need an almost endless versatility of resource. If a house is to be built, the government's official representative is chief builder. If the launch has broken down, this is the man who repairs the engine. A telephone line is to be run, and here is the chief of the linemen. The artillery is to be mounted or the guard to be drilled, and here is the commanding officer. It is an isolated existence, to be sure. But one comes to realize that men and women who can meet its demands have that within them which can defy their isolation. For, yes, their wives go with them.

Danger from Japanese Poachers.

With the disappearance of the pelagic sealer the islands will henceforth have less need of their armament. Until now, however, the military responsibilities of the agents have been fraught with a real and serious personal danger as well as that of international complication. In a place so remote the whole population might be destroyed months before the world could know there was trouble. There is in winter a natural defence in the very ice that comes down from the north and cuts these islands off from the rest of the world. In summer they bravely set up their guns and drill their guards. The natives are an effective garrison, if a small one, for under training they have become very skilful riflemen, and likewise know their Gatlings and their Hotchkisses. Some of the seal rookeries have always been under watch during the summer, each watch house with a telephone line to the government headquarters.

The danger has been the Japanese poachers. The pelagic sealing schooners surrounded the islands, shooting the seals as they came out to sea in their search for food, and not seldom sending boats boldly within the three mile national limit. In the dense and constant fogs they could elude the revenue cutters which were on patrol, and their guns were often heard near shore when the boats could not be seen. Many necessarily escaped, but every season furnished its list of captured poachers, and in 1908 an apparently planned series of raids by the Japanese sealing fleet resulted in the capture of three or four landing parties on St. Paul Island.

The Island guards, with Mr. Lembkey and Mr. Judge, the government agents, in command, fortunately were not injured, but they killed no fewer than seven Japanese and captured a dozen of the party.

There are other adventurous experiences. There was a shipwreck on St. George Island, a vessel on its way from Nome with miners and their families. All hands from the islands turned out to help and the seventy persons were saved from the sinking ship. This meant seventy new mouths to feed out of limited stores, and men, women and babies to shelter for the next few weeks or more, until a cutter could take them to Juneau. But it was the last cutter of the season, and after the departure three men appeared in the village who had deliberately hidden back in the island to avoid being sent away.

They were typical mining camp outlaws, of the Dan Stark and Runyon style, guns, braggadocio and all. They coolly informed Dr. Chichester, the St. George agent, that they had chosen this place to spend the winter because they knew they could not be ejected and must be furnished food and shelter. And in fact they must. For such as these no existing lock-up would have been effective and they would in any case have to be fed. To forbid them the village was to court their depredations from without and constant trouble with the natives.

The same four men had been the government agents in charge of the Pribilof Islands for sixteen years or more, until last spring. For a year there had been a naturalist, besides, with, of course, at all times, the resident physician and school teachers. The entire establishment, formerly under the Treasury Department, was a few years ago transferred to the Bureau of Fisheries, in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The chief agent is Mr. Walter I. Lembkey; two assistants are Mr. James Judge and Major E. W. Clark.

Dr. H. D. Chichester and Dr. Walter H. Hahn, the other assistant agent and the naturalist, were victims of a tragic disaster last May, when both men and their wives, in a sailboat, were capsized in a squall. After an hour's struggle in the water, when rescue was at last accomplished, Dr. Chichester and Dr. Hahn died. This terrible news was awaiting Mr. Lembkey when he arrived at St. Paul aboard the first vessel of the summer, two weeks later, and he thence made it known by revenue cutter and wireless. Mrs. Chichester and Mrs. Hahn had gone to the islands the previous July as brides. Dr. Chichester had just taken his medical degree, and was voluntarily taking up the study of certain health problems of the natives on the islands, in addition to his work as agent. Dr. Hahn's observations as a biologist were expected to aid in many of the troublesome questions concerning the seal herd.

Styles for the Girls.

What the Aleuts are to-day in education and civilized attainment they owe largely to the government agents and the latters' wives, as well as to the teachers and the physicians that have been provided for them. It has been no prescribed duty of Mrs. Lembkey, Mrs. Judge and Mrs. Clark during all these years, nor of Mrs. Hahn and Mrs. Chichester during their briefer experience, to teach the native women household arts, but this they have all found their pleasure in doing.

The native girls are skilled in dressmaking and are clever imitators. The arrival of the ship with any of these women on board has meant the advent of new patterns and new dress goods, a special delight for the native girls which their white friends are glad to provide. The women of the islands do all the sewing, except the making of the grown men's clothes, and at gatherings for the purpose on the long, dark winter days the American women preside and direct.

The native men do the village work and shoot or gather eggs for the common store of food. Mr. Judge helped them to build a club house, and here they play billiards and other games the white men have taught them. Here, too, occur the dances, the favorite amusement of the natives.

The work—the men's work—of all sorts is done under orders of the agents through a first and second chief, elected by the natives themselves. These chiefs are held responsible, and they produce satisfactory service. The vice of the Aleut is drink, but the government forbids the landing of liquor on the islands. They have an intoxicant, however, a concoction of sugar and yeast, which they make for themselves. The agents restrict this indulgence by curtailing the sugar supply.

The Aleut is not cleanly by nature, though he has greatly improved in this respect. His houses, despite the white men's efforts, are not as sanitary and wholesome as they should be. This, with the weakness of deterioration during two centuries of abnormal environment, has brought these natives under the plague of tuberculosis, which causes half the deaths on the islands. The average life is but twenty-three years, and a man is old at forty. The oldest now living is fifty-nine.

Russianized in religion, and spending generously upon his church, the inhabitant of the Pribilof Islands is Russianized also in blood. Though the Aleut race is of Mongolian origin, its members on the Pribilof Islands do not relish their Japanese resemblance, for they hate the enemies of the Russians. And, in fact, many of them are almost white, with most Caucasian features. They are proud of the Russian admixture, and call themselves, because of it, "creoles." The more of a mixture the prouder, but every Aleut says he is a creole. They all bear Russian names, and they have selected from the aristocracy.

The government agents tell many a story of the natives' simplicity and their crudity of instinct and emotion. But they tell also of their kindliness, their generosity and their willingness to learn. And there is pathos in the incident of the man who came to the government house one night to say that his baby "the stop." The government house and "the boss" are the source of all things to the native, from the food he eats to instructions about his family. This time it was a little pine lumber that was wanted. And Dr. Chichester, passing the window an hour later, saw the man making his baby's coffin.

There is pathos, too, in the isolated condition of these people. How can they overcome their enormous handicap? To us it is somewhat consoling, but at the same time in one way more pitiful, to realize that they know none but this life. The freedom and hardy independence of generations past they cannot remember. The development to which their present civilization entitles them their circumscribed existence forbids. Perhaps some time, however, if present benevolent efforts succeed, the world will be opened to the Aleut by instruction in handcraft industries which will afford him a means of livelihood independent of the seals.

The difficulty is to find markets for his products with all other humanity hundreds of miles away. But trusting to accomplish this by some means, the agents are urging manual training schools for the younger generations. Four native boys, through Mr. Judge's efforts, have this year gone to an Indian school in Oregon.

THE SURVEYOR AND THE CUB BEAR.

A SURVEYOR in a Western State captured a bear cub after a prolonged chase. He was walking quietly along when he saw the little bear not a dozen yards away. It seemed not the least afraid, and the man started toward it, expecting an easy capture; but when he was within a few feet of it it turned tail and scrambled up a chestnut tree, from the crotch of which it gazed down upon the man as if challenging him to catch it.

This increased the surveyor's desire to possess the cub. He threw off his coat and went up that tree. The youngster waited until he was close upon it, then walked out upon a limb. The man crawled cautiously after it, again thinking of an easy capture. But he was mistaken, for the cub, observing that he was coming too near for comfort, doubled itself into a ball and dropped to the ground. The man got to the ground in slower fashion. Meantime the cub had climbed another tree.

As the man regarded the cub, thoughtfully considering the situation, he finally came to the conclusion that the cub would pursue its former tactics. A happy idea came to the surveyor. He took from his pocket a tape line, made a slip noose in one end and placed it beneath the limb from which, as nearly as he could calculate, the cub would drop if it tumbled on the second tree as from the first. Keeping the box end of the line in his hand, the man climbed the tree.

The little bear waited until its pursuer had almost come upon it, and then walked out on a limb just as it had done before. The man cautiously followed and the cub walked nearly to the end, then dropped to the ground. As luck would have it the cub dropped outside the noose, but when he turned stepped inside with his forefeet. The man instantly drew the line, and there was the baby bear caught by its forelegs. It struggled and snarled, but only drew the slipknot tighter.

The man descended to the ground, holding the line taut. He had quite a tussle with the cub, but finally conquered, and the little fellow submitted to be taken away.

PRINCESS PATRICIA OF CONNAUGHT

JUDGED BY THEIR PIPES

They Show the Characteristics of the Race That Smokes Them.

There appeared in one of the Paris newspapers some amusing axioms of M. Watteville, who has devoted many years to the formation of a collection of pipes of all nationalities. M. Watteville declares that while cigars and cigarettes are cosmopolitan, pipes show by their peculiarities the characteristics of the race which smokes them. The activity of a race, says M. Watteville is proportionate to the length of the stem of the pipe which it smokes. The longer the stem is the lazier are the people who smoke it, and, inversely, the hardest workers smoke the shortest pipes. Big bowls denote generosity, small pipe bowls prove economy. Critical readers have informed M. Watteville that he has evidently not taken into account the class of man who carries a pipe with a very large bowl and borrows his tobacco.

Growing Potatoes by Electricity

Miss Dudgeon's experiments with the electrical treatment of potato crops on Lincluden Mains Farm have proved highly successful. The electric discharge was applied daily for three months and a half, averaging during that time four hours per day. Weather conditions determined the application of the discharge. From the outset the advantage was in favour of the crop under the wires, and in the end the tubers treated with electricity were ready for lifting a week earlier than those grown on the control plots, while there was an advantage also in the weight.

The small conveyances of every day life in Paris are curiously lacking, and the latest Parisian complaint relative to this fact is that they suffer great inconvenience through the cab stations not being fitted with telephones, as those in London are. Burdock Blood Bitters is compounded from roots, herbs, barks and berries, and is without a doubt the best remedy procurable for the purpose of driving all the blood impurities out of the system.

Mr. Geo. E. Miller, Clavering, Ont., writes:—"Last fall I was very much troubled with pimples. My face was literally covered with them. I went to four different doctors, but they could do me no good. One day a friend advised me to use Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got two bottles, and before I had taken all the first one, the pimples had nearly all disappeared, and by the time I had taken all the second one the pimples had disappeared completely, thanks to Burdock Blood Bitters. I would advise anybody who is troubled with any blood trouble to use Burdock Blood Bitters.

SHARP DEMAND ON OUR NERVES

Modern Civilization Tends to Remove Burden of Bread-making From Muscles

Following closely in the footsteps of Dr. Inge, the new Dean of St. Paul, Sir James Crichton-Browne has now given his countrymen a severe verbal roasting. Speaking in London a few days ago, Sir James stated that the people of England of late had unfortunately become slipshod in much of their work, they fluttered from theme to theme, they had no patience to see a tragedy, and fell back on musical comedy. They had no stomach for books, no appetite for a square meal of literature. The introduction of machinery had made life at once more monotonous and more irritating.

"One cannot negotiate a London street-crossing in these motorial days," said Sir James, "without realising by heart-jolt and nerve-jolt that alarms are not confined to the battlefield of the Middle Ages. We are all more vivid than we used to be, and have to be more on the alert, and so make sharper demands on our nerves, and are therefore more prone to nervousness."

After giving figures relating to insanity, Sir James said he believed they warranted a belief in a portentous growth of nervousness. He pointed out that almost all the most efficient causes of insanity were retreating, but that insanity itself remained stationary, if indeed it was not advancing.

"The explanation," he continued, "is, it seems to me, to be found in nerves and nervousness. The tendency of modern civilisation has been to transfer the burden of bread-making for masses of the people from the muscles to the nerves. We have in many of our industries adopted a policy of 'speeding up,' whereby men do their work in less time than formerly and with fewer intervals of rest allowed them in the workshops, and therefore with more exciting and exhausting calls on their nerves.

"We have been bringing up our babies on anything but mother's milk and by the employment of our women in factories and by giving them an unrestricted sphere of activity have curtailed that family life in which the child best grows and thrives. We have subjected our children indiscriminately to educational processes on the path of mechanical obedience rather than on that of self-realisation, which, however advantageous they may have been to some, have proved to others the starting point in nervous degeneration. We have been forcing education on multitudes of children while half starved and incapable of mental assimilation. It is, I believe, to stress and strain that we must look for the explanation of the fact that insanity holds its own while its best accredited causes are on the wane."

HOOLIGANS AT LARGE

Set Fire to Newspapers in a Theatre Caused a Panic.

At panic at the Alcazar Theatre in Bordeaux was caused by a number of hoodlums in the upper gallery. These rascals set fire to some newspapers, and waved them over the gallery shouting "fire," while the crowded audience was breathlessly watching the dramatic development of the "Lyons Mail." Terror-stricken by these shouts and the flames from the burning newspapers, the spectators rose in a body and rushed for the exit. From the upper part of the house people tried to scamper down to the lower seats. A mass of woodwork collapsed, and they were hurled head foremost into the orchestral stalls, ten of them sustaining serious injuries.

Other person jumped from the windows into the streets. One young man broke his leg and five other spectators were taken to the hospital. M. Nouts, a policeman, who tried to check the rush at the outbreak of the panic, was rushed down by the seething throng, and more than 500 persons trampled over him. His condition is serious

In the meantime the hoodlums who themselves with seats and pieces of wood, with which they smashed the mirrors and tables of the theatre cafe.

ARTIFICIAL DIAMONDS

A New Process Has Been Discovered By a German Chemist

The newspaper announces that a new process for the manufacturing of artificial diamonds has been discovered by Doctor Werner von Bolton, a chemist in Berlin. The doctor observed that ordinary lighting gas decomposes when exposed to the vapor of mercury, and that if the gas is allowed to work on metallic amalgams of mercury, the carbon contained in the gas is liberated, both in a non-crystallized form and in crystals, or diamonds. As the diamonds obtained were infinitesimal in size, diamond dust was placed in a tube in which gas was dissolved to act as so-called mother crystals. The newly-formed crystals adhere to these and the result is a larger, but still very small stone. The amalgam used is natrium. It is placed in a glass tube containing a small quantity of diamond dust, and lighting gas is passed through the tube for four weeks. The inventor is now engaged upon the problem of increasing the size of the stones.

AN AUSTRIAN TRAGEDY

Private Tutor In Revenge Shot His Pupil and Her Brother.

A terrible tragedy has taken place in the house of a former official in the Ministry of Justice, Austria. The teacher of his children, Chevalier de Matkovich, aged 24 years, had asked for the hand of the baron's daughter, Marie, who is also 24 years of age. The father refused the request. Matkovich thereupon entered the house in the absence of the father and mother, and shot Marie with a revolver. He also killed her brother Robert, aged 21, and mortally wounded another brother George aged 17. The murderer then committed suicide with the same revolver. The parents returning home were met by a terrible spectacle.

OF INTEREST TO SMOKERS

Electricity Properly Applied Kills Fungus in Tobacco Leaves.

A curious discovery, of concern to all smokers has just been verified. It was suggested some five years ago by a Mr. Lusby, that electricity, if properly applied, ought to kill all the fungus that is always associated with the tobacco leaf. If this could be done the tobacco would keep in condition indefinitely, and would be much sweetened, since electricity can convert mould or fungus into a sweet and sterilised form. A quantity of tobacco was accordingly so treated and left for four years. A number of people including some men of science, were so struck by the sweetness of the tobacco and its sound condition after this period, that the method is to be used on a large scale commercially.

NOTABLE LAND SALES

Among the notable land sales during the past year in England was that of the Duke of Bedford's Devonshire estate, which realised $3,500,000. Most of the land was bought by the tenants. The Duke of Sutherland, who is buying up thousands of acres in Canada, sold 1,280 acres at Trentham in Staffordshire for about $125,000, and Viscount Clifden has unloaded 2,000 acres in Oxfordshire for $210,000, an estate in Cornwall for $65,000, and one in Cambridgeshire for $325,000. Another big sale was that of Lord Londesborough's estates in Yorkshire, which netted about $940,000, while Lord Lansdowne, the famous Tory leader in the House of Lords, got over $170,000 for 1,050 acres in Wiltshire.

PRINCESS ZITA DUCHESS SOPHIE

A Struggle as to Which Will be Next Empress of The Austrian Dominions

The wedding of the Archduke Karl Franz-Joseph of Austria to Princess Zita of Parma, is the centre of a more elaborate web of romance and intrigue than any page of Dumas. The extremely plain-looking, but, one hears, gracious and pleasant bridegroom, is a pawn in a game in which the crown of Austria is the prize. The demure-faced little Princess Zita, young and smiling, is another. And everybody knows it.

When the famous Crown Prince Rudolph came to an untimely and mysterious end many years ago, the next claimant to the succession was Archduke Francis Ferdinand, a handsome and determined Prince. But his marriage with a charming lady-in-waiting, called Countess Sophie Chotek, stood in the way, because he refused to put her on one side as morganatic and, instead, insisted upon her right to share her husband's honours, and that of her children to succeed him. And long has the war waged between the Court and this most gallant husband.

Now they have married the young Karl Franz to a royal girl, and the old Emperor has declared this couple his successors. Meanwhile the charming Duchess of Hohenburg, as Francis Ferdinand's morganatic wife is called, is thought to have a tremendous hold over the affections of the people. Her very mystery aids her. She is named "The Invisible Duchess," as she keeps away regularly from all public functions and will not be trapped into doing anything committal of her dignity. Clever Duchess Sophie! Which pair will succeed? In the wedding photographs the old Emperor is looking most wickedly triumphant; if he were not a king one would say he was winking.

VICTORIA TUNNEL

Work on the Great "Bore" in Switzerland is Nearing Completion

Work on the Lotschberg Tunnel, in Switzerland, nine and a quarter miles long, is now nearly finished. Six years' labor have been spent upon it. The thousands of Italians who were employed on the work are already gradually departing, and one of their great colonies, Goppenstein, a forlorn village at the south portal of the Lotschberg will soon be deserted. The workmen who remain will be those engaged in constructing the great viaduct near the tunnel mouth. Not very far from the southern portal of the great tunnel is a small tunnel cut out of a huge boulder, which is supposed to bear a resemblance, somewhat fanciful, it is true, to the profile of the late Queen Victoria, whose name the tunnel bears. Originally it was intended to blast the boulder away, but as it was so well known as the "Victoria Rock" it was decided to bore through it instead, thus preserving its famous outline intact. At present the rock can be seen from the Rhone Valley, but when trains are running through the Lotschberg it will be much better seen from the carriage windows before passing through the Victoria tunnel. The finishing off of the great tunnel will be done by the Italian workmen in Kanderateg, at the north portal, so that in a month or two there will be no village of Goppenstein left. On the south approach line nothing more can be done except to complete the embankments. Next spring the rails will be laid, and the whole line will be ready for international traffic by the end of 1913, six months in advance of the contract time.

ILLUMINATIONS

"Yes," proudly observed Mr. Newrich to his actor friend, "your profession may be a very lofty one in an artistic sense, but that of a successful city merchant is much better. Look at me. At the early age of forty five I retired on my fortune, and was presented by my fellow-merchants with an illuminated address. Can you boast of anything like that? Have you ever had an illuminated address?"

"I have," replied the actor—"once."

"When?" asked Mr. Newrich.

"Why," replied the actor, "when my lodgings caught fire."

WANTS A TREATY.

President Taft Anxious to Be Friendly With Germany.

Berlin, Dec. 8.—The Tageblatt publishes under a Washington date what purports to be an interview with President Taft on the subjects of international arbitration, armaments, Mr. Shuster and the trusts.

According to the correspondent, the President is most anxious for an arbitration treaty with Germany, of whose love of peace he is firmly convinced. He foresees that all nations which sign arbitration treaties with the U. S. will duplicate these among themselves. An international tribunal, he thinks, can be based on this structure, with the necessary executive power to enforce its decisions. The first decision of such a tribunal would give the signal for a successive limitation of armaments, for which there is no other prospect.

President Taft, says the correspondent, believes that the Panama Canal by bringing the nations commercially closer together will work for peace. The canal will be open to all nations, with a natural limitation in the case of war.

After giving the opinion of the President in regard to the trusts which covered much the same ground as the recent message, the correspondent says that the President is convinced that reorganization is necessary, and that this should be effected without the disturbance of commercial progress.

The President recognized in the course of an interview that a tariff which was too high favored the building up of monopolies and was a continual temptation to form small trusts, which were often more oppressive to the consumer than the big ones. He was, says the correspondent, conscious that he was elected upon the expectation of an honorable tariff commission.

President Taft suggested that the law courts offer a remedy to German importers who are protesting that Canadian paper arrangements constitute discrimination.

Referring to the position of W. Morgan Shuster, the American, who is acting as treasurer-general in Persia, President Taft said that he went to Persia in his private capacity and that intervention by the U. S. was excluded.

President Taft throughout the interview showed unmistakably that his sympathies were with Germany.

Will Dynamite Pekin.

Pekin, Dec. 8.—The rebels are levying tribute on and obtaining subscriptions from Pekin officials who draw Imperial salaries, but fear to sympathize openly with the revolution. The rebels freely state that they intend to dynamite and attack Pekin. Some arrests have been made, but the Government is practically powerless owing to the timidity of the official class. The student class is powerful in China and is forcing extreme demands because of the racial timidity of the elders, who would be content with the limitations the members of the court have already imposed upon themselves. Precautions are being taken to prevent a rising of the Manchu troops because of dissatisfaction over the Regent's seemingly compulsory retirement and the prospect of all the Manchus, in consequence of this, losing their pensions.

Wuchang, Dec. 8.—While absolutely oppposed to the retention of the Manchu dynasty and personally favoring a republic, Gen. Li Yuen Heng and the other revolutionary leaders have decided to accept a constitutional monarchy, with Yuan Shi Kai, or some other satisfactory Chinese, as ruler, under a constitution and Parliament, if a majority of the people prefer this settlement.

After all these years Mrs. O'Leary's cow has been vindicated. Another instance of the tardiness of justice in America.—Louisville Post.

We are told at the end of forty years it was not Mrs. O'Leary's cow, but presumably a cigar thrown into a pile of shavings that started the great Chicago fire. Which is all very well in the interest of truth and veracity, but it unnecessarily imposes the enormous task of making adequate amends to the cow.—Leavenworth Times.

WONDERFUL FURNACES.

Those Leaping at Niagara Are the Hottest in the World.

"At Niagara are the hottest furnaces in the world," says a writer. "Here clay is melted in vast quantities to form aluminum, a metal as precious a few years ago as gold. Here lime and carbon, the most infusible of all the elements, are joined by intense heat in the curious new and useful compound, calcium carbide. Here graphite, the cousin of the diamond, is made. Phosphorus is made in large quantities, and carborundum is manufactured. It has been prophesied that it is merely a matter of time before diamonds will be made at Niagara.

"These marvelous new things in science and invention have been made possible by the 'chaining' of Niagara to the wheels of industry. The power of falling water is transformed into electricity. Science has found that the form of energy known as electricity can be changed into the vibration known as heat. Accordingly thousands of horse power are conveyed as electricity over a copper wire, changed into heat and light between the tips of carbon electrodes and there work wonders.

"It is scarcely twenty years since the first electrical furnaces of practical utility were constructed, but if the furnaces today in operation at Niagara Falls alone were combined into one they would, one scientist speculates, make a glow so bright that it could be seen from the moon. One furnace has been built in which an amount of heat energy equivalent to 700 horse power is produced in an arc cavity not larger than an ordinary water tumbler."

CHEEKY SWINDLERS.

A Get-rich-quick Scheme That Was Nipped by Uncle Sam.

It is not easy, yet it is possible, to comprehend something of the mental status of the man who buys a gold brick or allows a gang of green goods men to fleece him. In such cases it is merely greed outstripping reason.

But the limit of human credulity seems to have been reached when the authorities at Washington disclosed a swindling scheme in which success was attained by exploiting the alleged financial embarrassment of no less an institution than the United States government. The swindlers have quietly circulated a report that Uncle Sam is so greatly in need of funds that he is secretly floating "an immense issue of national banknotes." How many "come-ons" have been induced to subscribe for this national currency that is to be sold at a discount has not been accurately determined, but the business would undoubtedly have become very profitable if the government had not put a speedy stop to it.

One may sympathize to a limited extent with the victim of the smooth and convincing confidence man. But the man or woman who can be gulled by any such absurd get-rich-quick scheme as this latest device is beyond the limit of credulity.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Going Through the Panama Canal.

In passing through the canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific a ship will enter a channel with a bottom width of 500 feet and follow this for seven miles to Gatun, where it will by three locks be lifted eighty-five feet to the level of Lake Gatun. It will steam at full speed through this lake for a distance of twenty-four miles to Bas Obispo, where it will enter the Culebra cut. It will pass through the cut, a distance of about nine miles, in a channel with a bottom width of 300 feet. At Pedro Miguel it will enter a lock and be lowered thirty feet to a small lake, on the other side of which it will enter two locks and be lowered to the sea level, passing out into the Pacific through a channel eight miles long with a bottom width of 500 feet.

In the United States there are 465 periodicals printed in foreign languages. Of these 83 are dailies, 6 triweeklies, 94 semiweeklies, 324 weeklies, 10 semimonthlies and 28 monthlies.—Harper's Weekly.

A New Animal.

A gigantic carnivorous mammal, hitherto unknown, was discovered recently in Dutch New Guinea. This animal, found and named by English naturalists in the course of coast explorations, lives at an altitude of 650 yards in a place inhabited by a tribe of black dwarfs. The quagga, as this beast is known, is striped like a zebra, but its aspect is ferocious. The animal is like a tapir and is of a species supposed to have died out thousands of years ago. Its protruding teeth give it an appearance of extreme cruelty.—Harper's.

The College of Cardinals.

The Catholic college of cardinals has now the smallest membership recorded in centuries and the smallest proportion of Italians ever known. The traditional membership is seventy, and by the recent death of Cardinal Cavicchioni it is reduced to forty-nine. It is three and a half years since any cardinals have been created, and it is likely to be a year before a consistory is called.

HON. MACKENZIE KING'S ARRAIGNMENT OF THE WHITNEY GOVERNMENT LAST EVENING

LABOUR HAS ITS GREAT FIELD NIGHT HOT SHOTS FROM MACKENZIE KING

The Ex-Labour Minister and Mr. Hall Discuss the Campaign Issues With Special Stress on an Improved Workman's Compensation Act---Mr. Stratton Takes Up Some of Whitney's Broken Promises.

Labour turned out en masse to R. B. Hall's meeting in the Opera House last night. Of course it took many others to make up the crowd in the audience, but take it big and large, it was a workingman's meeting. He was there in force, and applauded Mr. Hall's ringing utterances;---and Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King's fight-from-the-drop-of-the-hat speech speech to the echo.

Chairman the Hon. J. R. Stratton, opened the proceedings by mentioning a few of Whitney's broken promises. He could have named more if he had had time, but he stepped aside to give the candidate and the distinguished visitor the right of way. Mr. Hall held the attention of the audience for an hour, and Mackenzie King for an hour and a half more, and the only regret the workingmen expressed was that it didn't last longer.

A workingman's audience, it was naturally interested in the first Minister of Labour Canada ever had, Mackenzie King, who went down with the ship when the Laurier Government was defeated last September. Be sure the Minister of Labour would be defeated in a contest like that. The big interests would take care that he would be one of the first to go. What the audience saw in Mackenzie King, was a young man, who would look almost a boy if it wasn't for a bald spot on the top of his head. He is thirty-seven years old and clean shaven. He believes in work, and it was in his everyday working clothes — brown sack suit, that he addressed a workingman's audience. He stepped off the Toronto train, without a bite of supper, drove to the Opera House, and got busy.

A Good Fighter.

What the audience heard in Mackenzie King was a hammer-and-tongs, solar-plexus speaker. No notes for him! Hands in his pockets, and straight ahead, only stopping three times in an hour and a half to take a drink of water. He handled Sir James Whitney without gloves. No wonder this quick, merciless infighting of Mackenzie King's peeves the tyrant of Queen's Park, and makes him try to sneer his young opponent out of countenance by callig him the Boy Woder. Mackenzie King's speech showed that he was three things that Sir James Whitney will never be — a clear thinker, an advanced reformer, and a convincing debater. But what the workingman liked him most for was because he was a scrapper.

Mr. King's first point was that seeing that there was no second chamber in the Ontario Legislature, no Senate, as in the Dominion Parliament, no House of Lords, as in the British Parliament, no constitutional check on hasty and intemperate legislation, and nobody whose say-so counted a hoot in the Government, except Sir James Whitney, and his whim and caprice, it would be the course of wisdom to give him a strong Opposition to curb, as Shakespeare says, this cruel devil of his will.

One-Man Rule.

"When you speak of government in Ontario," said Mr. King, "you might as well say Sir James Whitney, and be done with it. In the last Legislature the Conservatives had 87 seats and the Liberals 17. This is a serious condition. You must strengthen your Opposition. No greater calamity could befall this province than to give Sir James Whitney a stronger following, or as strong a following as he has now. Even as it is, the man ignores friends and opponents alike. The way to check him up is to send to the Legislature, alert, aggressive, untiring and undaunted critics like your candidate, Mr. Hall."

Mr. King next gave examples of what it meant to have a Conservative Government at Ottawa, and a Conservative Government at Toronto, and the shuffling that goes on between the two Governments in matters that vitally affect the interests of Ontario. He instanced the Manitoba boundary, in which matter Ontario had to endure the humiliation of having a Manitoba man announce in Ontario what was going to happen to Ontario before hte responsible Ontario ministers knew anything about it.

"A matter, by the way," said Mr. King, "in which we find three premiers telling three different stories, with the view to keeping the people in ignorance until after this election."

"The way to right that,' said Mr. King, 'is to put a Liberal Government in at Toronto, as an effectual counterbalance."

After discussing Sir James Whitney's evasions and equivocations on bilingual schools, Mr. King came to the Labour question. He showed how the Department of Labour had been originated by, and had grown in importance under the Laurier Government, and how a Labour Bureau, established by the Ross Government in Ontario, about the same time, had been allowed to fade away, and gradually die under the Whitney Government, Robert Glockling, the superintendent, resigning, because he would not carry on a farce.

"Let the workingman look around" said Mr. King, "and see who his real friends are."

The Workman's Compensation Act.

"There is no single question," Mr. King continued, "so important as the Workman's Compensation Act, and the Factory Inspection Act. While Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan have been passing modern and effective acts Sir James Whitney's government has done nothing. The statistics of accident in industrial employments show that 2,000 workingmen are killed every year, and from 5,000 to 20,000 are injured permanently. Those accidents are as inevitable as the loss in a railway's rolling stock, and the wear and tear of machinery. These statistics mean that in the next ten years 20,000 of Canada's wealth producers will be swept out of existence, and 100,000 to 500,000 will receive permanent injuries. These facts are as certain as that night follows day.

"It becomes important," continued Mr. King, "that compensation be had for loss of life. Twenty thousand families deprived of their bread winners. For certain loss like that there must be certain compensation, and that without a lawsuit. Think of these families plunged in sorrow at the death of their loved ones, dragged into court to fight for the compensation—and, alas, generally, to lose—to which they are entitled. It is hideous to contemplate. What chance have they against the long purse of the insurance company, and the high-salaried, experienced legal quibbler the insurance company employs to conduct its case?

Box Cars and Human Life.

"What the Liberal party and your candidate, Mr. Hall, say, is that human life is quite as important as box cars, machinery, and such, and that if something can be written off to provide against their loss, the law ought to write something off to compensate for lost human lives. What we favour is something like the English law, which puts the onus on the corporation of proving the workingman negligent; a law which has cut litigation for damages in England, down to almost nothing, and has given the English workingman his damages without delay, or haggling. Mr. Rowell says, and this is my view, too, let the State step in and assess the damages itself".

The Artful Dodger.

"Following his usual practice," continued Mr. King. "Sir James Whitney is taking shelter behind Chief Justice Sir William Meredith, who is to report what can be done toward amending the Workman's Compensation Act. If you prefer that sort of indecision and dodging to Mr. Rowell's positive attitude, and Mr. Hall's positive pledge that he goes to the Legislature for the special purpose of fighting for an honest Workman's Compensation Act, then I have nothing to say. You can look to heaven, or elsewhere for your legislation, but you will never get it from Sir James Whitney".

Mr. King had considerable fun with Provincial Secretary Hanna's policy of getting jail-birds 'back to the land" at the Guelph prison farm, as compared with the Government's general supineness toward getting honest men back to the land in the New Ontario clay belt or in the depopulated rural districts of Old Ontario. The school policy, the finances, and other issues of the campaign were also dealt with.

"All these people want," concluded Mr. King, "is to be returned to power, and that is the last thing in the world a Government should exist for. If you don't turn them out you can at least do your duty by building up a strong Opposition, in which Mr. Hall, your candidate, would be an outstanding force for progress and reform."

Hon. Mr. Stratton, appeared as chairman, at the request of his friend, Mr. Hall, who had been one of the most active and useful representatives West Peterborough had ever had in Parliament, and if the people elected him this time, he would give equally good service. The chairman's introductory speech was short, but it was long enough to expose many of the long short-comings of Sir James Whitney to carry out his promises. Premier Whitney was long on promises, but short on performance. If his political promissory notes had been payable in cash, he would have had some excuse for doubling the provin-

HEROIC ACT TO BE WELL RECOGNIZED

Praiseworthy Effort Being Made to Secure Royal Humane Society Medal for Mr. Jas. Ellis

RESCUED A BOY

An effort is being made to have the bravery of Mr. James Ellis, proprietor of the Peterborough Mattress Company, recognized in a fitting manner by securing for him the Royal Humane Society's medal. It will be remembered that on Good Friday last, Mr. Ellis plunged into the swollen and icy-cold waters of the Otonabee at the Hunter street bridge, and with great difficulty rescued a youngster who had fallen into the river. The feat was the more remarkable in that Mr. Ellis was just recovering from an attack of pneumonia and his plunge into the cold water might quite easily have brought on a relapse. In order that the Royal Humane Society's medal may be obtained it is necessary to have the testimony of a number of eye-witnesses of the rescue. One of these witnesses has been discovered, and the Examiner would like to get the names of some of the others. A number of people saw the incident and they would be doing justice to a most worthy object if they would leave their names and addresses with the Examiner.

A Novel Offer

Mr. E. N. McWilliams Will Give Reductions on Furs Purchased on Other Days Than Saturday by Local People

Mr E. N. McWilliams, the local furrier, has adopted a novel and what promises to be a decidedly effective method of diverting some of the trade from Saturdays and spreading it over the rest of the week. It has become a too common practice for Peterborough people to defer their shopping until Saturday and as the farmers are necessarily forced to do their buying on the same day, the result is crowded stores and over-worked sales people. In order to prevent this state of affairs as much as possible Mr. McWilliams has decided to give a discount of five per cent., on all furs purchased by Peterborough people between now and Christmas on any day but Saturday. That is, local people by doing their buying throughout the week will find themselves considerably in pocket through Mr. McWilliams' enterprise, which might reasonably be adopted by merchants in other lines of business.

I suffered long and acutely from rheumatism and tried one liniment after another in vain. I also took medicines internally but it remained for Zam-Buk to effect a cure. It seemed to penetrate to the very seat of the pains, driving them completely out, and I am now cured."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for piles, ulcers, cold sores, chapped hands, cuts, burns, scalds, scalp sores, babies' rashes, and all skin injuries and diseases. All druggists and stores, 50c. box or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse substitutes.

ADMIT ESPIONAGE

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LEIPSIC, GERMANY, DEC. 8. — 'Tis stated this morning that Max Schults and four German associates including two officers of the German army, have admitted their connection with a system British espionage which seeks to report to the British government all developments of the German army and navy, including secret gun making and naval construction. This is a most serious admission so far as these men are concerned personally. They will be sentenced tomorrow. There has been no misrepresentation to th eBritish government in the matter. German espionage in Britain is admittedly existing.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY HELD YESTERDAY AFTERNOON

Encouraging Reports Were Presented at Business Gathering ---Financial Statement Presented by the Treasurer ---Officers for the Year Were Elected.

Mr. T. F. Matthews presided at the annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society held in the city council chamber yesterday afternoon, when reports were read and general business transacted.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by Mr. R. W. Travers, in the absence of Mr. E. L. Goodwill.

A vote of thanks was moved by the chairman to the Peterborough Radial Ry. Co., for their kindness in allowing the children to ride free on the cars on Tag Day.

The Secretary's and Treasurer's reports were then read, and were as follows:

SECRETARY'S REPORT

The secretary's report was presented as follows:

Peterborough, Dec. 7th, 1911.

To the President and Members of the Children's Aid Society of Peterborough, Ladies and Gentleman:

I have the honour to present the annual report as secretary of your society.

The work has been of a character similar to that done in previous years and there are but few facts in connection with it that stand out prominently.

We began the year with a substantial baalnce in the treasury, probably the largest balance we ever had to begin a year's work with, and we also conclude the year with a substantial balance on hand, thanks to the generosity of the citizens of Peterborough by reason of their generous contributions to the Tag Day campaign.

Fifty children have been removed from their homes in this city and county during the past year. Of this number 34 passed through the Shelter and 16 were dealt with in the secretary's office and placed direct in foster homes. Forty-two have been placed in foster homes on trial or adoption, and a number have been returned to their parents conditionally on a substantial improvement being made in the home. Thirty of these children were from the country and 20 from the city, and there are in the Shelter at the present time seven.

In addition to this, over one hundred cases have been investigated and warnings served upon the parents or those in charge to improve home surroundings, with the result that the home conditions were immediately improved to such an extent as to make it unnecessary for us to remove the children.

The criminal side of the work has been carried on as in previous years. All cases in which boys under 14 years of age and all cases affecting girls under 16 years of age have been watched in the police courts by an officer of the society. The provisions of the law respecting the trials of juvenile offenders has been carefully followed by the magistrates and chief of police, who have, as in former years, acted in entire sympathy with the spirit of the legislation under which our work is carried on, and I wish to acknowledge with thanks the services of Chief Thompson and the constables which have been at our disposal at all times.

The management of the Shelter has been excellent. Our officers have nothing but satisfaction to express of the manner in which Mr. and Mrs. Henry have performed their duties. All children in the Shelter of school age are attending school, and we are glad to note that there has been very little illness during the year. It became necessary to build a septic tank at considerable expense, also storm windows have been provided and considerable cement work has been done around the building. Mr. Henry supervised the building of the tank and the other work, and I consider that his services should be recognized in some substantial manner.

The ladies have rendered efficient service, and the committee in charge of the clothing is deserving of our warmest thanks. We have also to especially thank the ladies and girls who freely contributed their aid and assistance in promoting the "Tag Day" campaign.

All of our wards have been visited in their foster homes, and I am glad to state that we have not received a single complaint. This year the vis-

POWER BY-LAW

Ratepayers of Peterborough Will be Asked to Express Their Opinion on Hydro-Electric Proposition

AT MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

At a special meeting of the City Fathers, held in the Council Chambers last night, the Power By-law was introduced and passed. The by-law is: "Whether the people shall accept power from the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario." The by-law received its several readings and passed. Only those entitled to vote on a money by-law will be allowed to vote on this question, when it comes up at the Municipal elections.

Mr. Shook was present with another power proposition, and said he did not want to submit it, if it was going to be a detriment to the passing of the present by-law. Mr. Shook wanted to know if by the passing of this by-law, the city would be bound in any way, or if it would be able to make any other contracts. Mayor Morrow explained that the city would not be bound, but it would feel justified in having the opinion of the Hydro Electric Commission on any proposition. The city is by no means tied up, however, but able to make contract for the cheapest power available. Mayor Morrow informed Mr. Shook that the Council would be willing to consider his proposition any time he would present it in writing. If the present measure carries, it will not mean that the city is bound to a contract, but will merely give the Council authority to ascertain the cost of the power from the Hydro Electric Commission. If the proposition meets with the approval of the Council, then a money by-law will be submitted to the people, for the purpose of making a definite contract.

Ald. Bradburn resigns.

The resignation of Ald. W. H. Bradburn was tendered last night, and Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Graham, that it be accepted. Ald. Brown moved that it be not accepted, as they wanted Ald. Bradburn in the Council another year. Ald. Bradburn stated that he hoped to be a member of the Council for 1912 any how, and was going to make a run for it at least. The resignation was accepted.

Other Business.

A communication was received from the Peterborough Lumber Co., suggesting that a bridge be built from Sherbrooke street, across the river to Maria street. The matter was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

It was necessary to appoint a chairman of the Finance Committee for the remainder of the year, in Ald. Bradburn's place. On motion of Ald. Graham, seconded by Ald. Morgan, Ald. Anderson was appointed.

The report of the Board of Works Committee and Property Committee were read and adopted.

The account of Gartshore & Thompson was moved to be paid.

There were present at the meeting Mayor Morrow, Ald. Graham, Bradburn, Anderson, Edgar, Morgan, Butler, Duncan, Metherel, and Ald Brown.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, DEC. 8, 1911

HON. MACKENZIE KING.

After his speech in the Opera House last night, Peterborough will feel a personal interest in the career of Honourable Mackenzie King. The former Minister of Labour is only thirty-seven years old. He, therefore, has most of his future before him. The achievements of his past make the promise of his coming years all the brighter. Some time ago he surprised the dull people who believe that politics is a sort of side line, to be taken up for selfish, personal interests, by announcing that he was in public life to stay, in spite of temporary defeat, and what was more, that he intended to study certain large public questions and know, authoritatively, what he was talking about.

Thus did Mackenzie King, like some young Spartan dedicating himself to the glory that was Greece, solemnly devote himself to an illuminated and intelligent statesmanship. Of course the interests called him doctrinaire, visionary, because their sole theory of politics is tinkering the tariff for personal gain. But doctrinaire, visionary are proud words. They stand for independent thinking, investigation, and an enlightened zeal for abstract right, as opposed to concrete selfishness.

Do not conclude from this that Mackenzie King is impractical. There is no older head in Canada, on such young shoulders. He is a philanthropist, who gets results; an idealist, who does; an altruist, who acts. He works through the political party which agrees with his principles, and he is a party man because that way he has the weight of numbers behind his high endeavours.

He has a boyish impetuousness of speech which must not blind you to the good, common sense behind it. He is a fast talker—so fast that sometimes Hansard cannot keep up—he uses no notes, and never pauses, except to water up, but in the very heat of rhetoric he never loses sight of the point he is aiming at. He is a plucky fighter, a hard from-the-shoulder hitter; calls a spade a spade, and puts human interest into his weightiest argument by tying up some one man to every question he propounds. It is this annoying argumentum and hominem which caused Sir James Whitney to spout fury at him, like an enraged geyser. The spirit of his famous grandfather, William Lyon Mackenzie, lives in the grandson. The Liberal party in Ontario is all the better and more hopeful for his buoyant and indomitable presence.

THOSE "CHEAP" SCHOOL BOOKS.

We have heard much boasting about cheap school books as a triumph of Whitney Government interest in the people. It is admitted that the books are cheap in a double sense, cheap in quality to correspond to the cheapness of the clap-trap cry, founded upon them, and also cheap in price. But that's no credit to the Whitney Government. Anybody could provide you with a cheap suit of clothing, if you furnished the material, paid for the making yourself, leaving the generous donor to put on the buttons and claim the credit of providing you with a cheap suit. The Whitney Government has done something very similar. When they boast of providing cheap school books, they do not tell the public what is the fact, that practically the entire cost of the production of those "cheap" school books was paid for out of the people's money, out of the funds of the Province. This kind, paternal, pure, honest and bold Government paid for setting every letter of the type in the new readers, paid the artists for making the engravings, paid engravers and electrotypers for making the plates, and the authors for the copyrights. In fact all the T. Eaton Company had to do with the books was to run them off on their presses, after the work had all been done for them at the expense of the taxpayers of Ontario. You, dear reader, paid your share, but you did not know it. This honest and bold Administration doesn't do things that way. When they want to give their friends, the T. Eaton Company, the best free advertisement ever handed over to anybody, they prefer to do good by stealth. Every retail merchant in Ontario feels the strangling effect of this competition. But the Whitney Administration was not satisfied to deal with this huge bargain-seeker in a straight, business like way. They must call upon the tax-payers of this Provice to make the Eaton's a free gift aggregating many thousands of dollars in value in order that the same taxpayers might believe they were getting their school readers a few cents cheaper. The whole proceeding is too much like the prize a man gets with a package of tea. The purchaser can be very sure that he is paying for the prize as well as the tea." We have been badly fooled.

POINTERS TO VOTERS.

Election day is close at hand, and electors are naturally looking for some indication, some hint upon which to found a reason for marking their ballot for or against the Whitney government. We know that many will shy at any advice to an elector how to vote, that comes from the Examiner or other Liberal papers; it will be said that they are prejudiced and are no safe guides. They want some better reasons for voting against the Whitney government, and its candidates. Well, they can have it from prominent newspapers—Conservative newspapers—on the same side of the political house as Sir James Whitney's government. Listen to them:

The Toronto World, (Conservative), says:

"Sir James Whitney has too many loyal slaves now. A few honestly frank and fearless freemen could do him no harm."

Read what the Hamilton Spectator, Conservative, says:

"All the brains in the country are not under the hat of Whitney."

Read also what the Toronto Telegram (Conservative), says:

"Whitney government slept for six years amid the possibilities of the Temiskaming country."

Read also what the Ottawa Citizen, (Conservative), says:

"The Premier allows his prejudices to warp his judgment."

The above expressions of opinion of candid friends, the above Conservative votes of want of confidence in the Whitney government, should furnish pointers to the independent electors how to vote. Everybody will admit that Sir James Whitney has too strong a support, in the point of numbers in the local legislature — too slavish and subservient a party following. Even if the Whitney government, as is rather rashly claimed for it, is honest, it will be all the better for watching. Power to do wrong with political impunity, proves a temptation to the most honest government.

In a house of a hundred, ten of a majority is enough for a government that wants to do right, and no honest government needs a majority of 70 out of 100 to help keep it straight. A reduction of Sir James Whitney's big majority will make him "sit up and take notice" that somebody besides himself is entitled to an opinion. Will West Peterborough send a representative to support a premier who, the most influential journal on the Conservative side, says "allows his prejudices to warp his judgment"—especially when his prejudices are against popular rights and progressive measures of reform? A vote for Hall is a hint to Sir James and his government to wake up from its "seven years' sleep amid the possibilities of New Ontario." It will be a hint that Premier Whitney's partizan flatterers, who beslaver with praise the government of reaction, do not express the opinions of the people whose servant he is, and not master. If any elector does not want to see the government defeated, he must, then, want to retain it in the interests of himself and the province. It is to his interests that it be provided with the absolutely necessary essential of good government, under the British system, a strong Opposition. It is time the elector thought of himself and voted for himself. He can't flourish upon party triumph. He finds that party triumph in the last Dominion election was Dead Sea fruit—full of fair promise, but in the mouth, ashes and bitterness.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Laurier government held itself entirely responsible for the reciprocity agreement, and was defeated on this definite issue. The Whitney government, in the case of bilingual schools, shirks responsibility.

The Review says: "Whitney is due for another lease of power, and Peterborough needs a Peck to support him." What weight would Peck have? It takes four Pecks to make a bushel.

Speaking at Orillia yesterday, Sir James Whitney said the three-fifths' clause "is the best piece of legislation, having regard to results, ever placed upon the statute books of Ontario." Do local option workers agree with the advocates of the bar in agreeing with Sir James?

It is reckoned that sixty thousand electors who voted Liberal in 1908, voted against reciprocity in September. And now, remarks the Globe, Mr. Borden is rewarding them by cutting off the heads of their friends in public office by the hundred. The Borden-Monk coalition seems to be making enemies as quickly as its most fervid opponents could wish.

EVASION AND CANDOUR.

"The solution of the problem is the provision of suitable teachers who will teach English and suitable inspectors who will enforce regulations. We are concerned that every child in this province be taught English, not that they learn French."—N. W. Rowell, leader of the Liberal party.

In the first place there are no bilingual schools. In the second place, Dr. Merchant has not got round them all.—Sir James Whitney.

The teaching of any other language but English in the schools of the province is illegal and should be stopped.—Hon. J. J. Foy.

Sir James Whitney will continue the bilingual school system and will protect the interests of the French minority.—Hon. Dr. Reaume.

What a contrast. Compare the bold fearless, absolute, frank declaration of N. W. Rowell, the leader of the Liberal party with the contradictory statements of Hon. J. J. Foy and Hon. Dr. Reaume and the refusal of Sir James Whitney to state his position on the bilingual school question. The Premier, as Mr. Rowell pointed out, has been condemned out of his own mouth for refusing to take a stand on a public issue.—Brantford Expositor.

ENJOYS EVERY MEAL

Since Taking Vinol — Eating Was Punishment Before.

There are hundreds even thousands of people right around here who have had no appetite for a long time and eat only because they must.

A Brooklyn man, Thos. J. Sinclair, says in a letter, "For nearly five years I was tormented with stomach trouble. I had no appetite and I suffered so much and so long that it seemed as if I never would get any relief. Vinol proved to be just what I needed. It brought back my appetite, relieved the painful symptoms and now my digestion is perfect. I enjoy every meal now, where formerly eating was almost a punishment."

This delicious cod liver and iron remedy without oil is wonderful to stimulate the appetite and build up the body. All who are weak and run down from stomach trouble or other causes should try Vinol on our positive guaranty to refund the money if they are not perfectly satisfied. Price Of Foodstuffs Is Fluctuating

Housekeepers and Christmas shoppers will no doubt be pleased to learn that the present high price of sugar has dropped ten cents per hundred. The price of number one granulated sugar now stands at $5.88 per cwt., and number one yellow at $5.48 per cwt. It has been learned on good authority that a further reduction is probable in the near future.

A jump of four cents per pound on all teas is looked for in the course of a few days. The Chinese revolution is thought to be directly responsible for this advance.

Other commodities which will be affected by the disturbances in the far East, embracing Italy, Turkey and Persia, are figs, dates, lemons and Turkish rugs. An advance in the price of figs and dates took place a short time ago, and a further increase is looked for.

CASCARETS CURE A BILIOUS HEADACHE

Gently but Thoroughly Cleanse Your Liver, Stomach and Bowels and You Feel Great by Morning

You're bilious, you have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellow, with dark rings under your eyes; your lips are parched. No wonder you feel ugly, mean and ill tempered. Your system is full of bile not properly passed off, and what you need is a cleaning up inside. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh physics that irritate and injure. Remember that every disorder of the stomach, liver and intestines can be quickly cured by morning with gentle, thorough Cascarets — they work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you and the entire family feeling good for months. Children love to take Cascarets, because they taste good and never gripe or sicken.

MR. HAWTREY AND HIS LONDON COMPANY

In "Dear Old Billy" at the "Grand" on Thursday, Dec. 14th

At the Grand on Thursday, Dec. 14, Mr. William Hawtrey and his company of London players will be the offering in a three act farce by a noted English writer, W. H. Risque. The title of the piece is "Dear Old Billy" and concerns the dilemmas of a good natured and kindly old gentleman who has submitted for twenty years to being perpetually nagged by a domineering wife, but who, like the proverbial worm, turns, and decides to legally rid himself of the virago. The articles of separation stipulate that he is to pay her anually seven hundred and fifty pounds, and it is distinctly understood that, should they be so unhappy as to meet she is not to speak to him, annoy or interfere with him, nor make known in any manner their relationship to each other. Through an oversight, however, there is no clause in the document of separation that prevents her being wherever he is, and this technicality she takes advantage of in most thorough fashion, never failing to be on the spot whenever an unkind fate places her husband in an embarassing situation, which happens frequently, as Dear Old Billy, being a genial soul, has attracted the attention of numerous well-meaning females who all want to minister to his wants, and being loth to give offense, submits, with results that invariably place him in compromising positions.

The critics, the public and theatrical managers of reputation and experience, who saw Mr. Hawtrey and his excellent company in this play during their four months' run in Chicago, part of which endured through a hot wave that succeeded in closing the doors of all but three theatres in that city, unhesitatingly declare that a more capable or better balanced company has not been assembled in many years. To assist Mr. Hawtrey in presenting one of the cleanest, crispest and most wholesomely funny farces that has ever been brought to America; not even excepting "Charley's Aunt," 'or "Jane." Mr. A. G. Delamater has selected a company that includes E. H. Kelly, formerly with Sir Henry Irving; George Stuart Christie, formerly leading man with Bertha Kalisch; Bernard Fairfax, formerly with John Drew; Harry Redding, formerly leading juvenile with William Faversham; Harry Lonsdale, formerly with E. S. Willard; Miss Jane Burby, eight seasons with May Irwin; Miss Cassie Jamieson, formerly with Beerbohm Tree; Miss Ruth Tomlinson with the Mary Mannering Co., Miss Laura Clement, for the past three seasons with Billie Burke; and Miss Mary Morrell.

OYSTER SUPPER

The annual oyster supper, under the auspices of the Park street Baptist Ladies' Aid was held in the schoolrooom last evening and was well attended.

The following programme was rendered and very much enjoyed:

Instrumental— The Misses Palmer and Gillespie.
Solo—Mr. Pratt.
Instrumental—Miss Pearl Payeton.
Solo—Mrs. Rehill.
Reading—Mr. J. Gohn.
Recitation— Miss Ethel Hill and Master Percy Hill.
Duett—Mrs. Rehill and Miss Hill.
God Save the ing.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Stanley Young, while poling across the Otonabee river at a point near the McDonald Lumber Company's saw mill, overbalanced, while changing his position in the boat, and was precipitated into the water. But for the fact that he was a good swimmer, he would have assuredly been drowned, as the current at this point is very swipt and treacherous. Young managed to climb back into the skiff and paddle to shore, none the worse for his unpleasant experience.

NOW MANAGER

Mr. Jack Thirnbeck, who for the past nine or ten years has been connected with the Brock street rink, has takenover the managership of the arena for the winter and intends to open the institution for skating and hockey just as soon as the weather man affords an opportunity. Preparations are being made to cover the roller-skating floor and the first flooding will be done when the weather warrants putting on the water. The present mild spell is not expected to last much longer, and it is hoped that there will be good skating in another week. Hockey teams who wish to arrange for practice hours are advised to see Manager Thirnbeck at once. There are a number of hours still available and they will be leased to the first comers.

IN INTERESTS OF ROYAL TEMPLARS

The Lindsay Post says: Mr. E. Skitch, who has been working in the interests of the Royal Templar Order here, completed his work and has left for home. During the time Mr. Skitch was here he secured 20 new members for the local council, 20 of whom took Sick and Funeral Benefit and Insurance. The council in town should take on new life with an addition of 30 more new members. Mr. Skitch will be missed in the church and Sunday school, where he was a devoted worker during his stay in town. We wish him success in other places where he may labour.

Mr. Skitch is working along the same lines in Peterborough at the present time.

LABOUR'S GREAT FIELD NIGHT

cial expenditure in five or six years. He had stood aghast at the ruinous extravagance of the Ross government which, with every public service adequately attended to, had spent only four and a quarter millions a year. Last year Mr. Whitney spent double that amount- $9,000,000, with a deficit of $500,000, and the direct debt had been increased to 10 millions, and the indirect debt 3 millions. Sir James promised no more land grants to railways, but the first time a big railway corporation cried, "hands up," he gave a grant of two million acres of the best agricultural land in Northern Ontario, to this railway, a quantity equal to 40 townships of 50,000 acres each. He had promised improved educational administration. This he had done by gorging Toronto University, a great and deserving institution, with funds, and starving the Public schools. He had increased the grants to education in this way: The province paid $150 per head for every university student, and $1 per head for every Public school pupil. He had promised assessment law reform and had done nothing, and even less than nothing; he had even refused to let the people vote for a reform on their own account, though 300 municipalities and 200 labour organizations had petitioned for the right to say how they would impose taxes on land and improvement values. He had promised but had failed to give an adequate Workman's Compensation Act and an efficient Factories Inspection Act. The list could be continued, but these few examples out of many that could be given, would show that Premier Whitney had not lived up to his promises or given progressive administration, such as a progressive province demanded. Promises, given with a record of failure behind them, such as Premier Whitney had achieved, were to be regarded with suspicion. In that very hall less than two months ago, they had heard promises made amidst great flag waving, of what triumphs of British principles, what exultation of the flag would follow, if they elected Mr. Borden. They did so, and they all know, that in these regards nobody got what was promised. Nobody in Ontario had got what they voted for. In introducing Mr. Hall, Mr. Stratton said that they knew their candidate, and they knew his ability and capacity for live, energetic representation and he hoped that every good citizen who desired the active development of the resources, and the capable administration of the affairs of the province, would give his support to Mr. Hall.

THE CANDIDATE'S ADDRESS.

It was an enthusiastic reception that Mr. Hall was accorded when he arose to speak. He wasted no time in beginning an effective attack on the Whitney Government and its administration, opening an eloquent assault, by criticizing the Government for unnecessarily bringing on the elections at the present time. The ostensible reason was to save the Province some $15,000, the cost of the bye-elections, which would have had to be held. But did not the general elections cost some $140,000 which should entitle the people to four terms at $35,000 each? And so $35,000 was being thrown away, and the Province, instead of saving $15,000, was losing $20,000. "There must be some other reason," said Mr. Hall "they must have something to conceal; something they are afraid of being investigated, and I will endeavour to point out some of these things to you to-night."

Increased Expenditure.

The enormous increase of the expenditure, during the seven years of the Conservative regime gave Mr. Hall some capital ammunition, which he handled cleverly. He showed that the annual expenditure had increased from four and one quarter millions, when Whitney came into power, to nine millions. The Opposition in the House had been too weak, that no opportunity had been given of making a proper investigation in the Public Accounts Committee of this expenditure. There had not been the men with the ability to go into the matter properly, and to see if the money of the people was being expended in a satisfactory manner. Surely the electors could see the wisdom of having a strong opposition so that wrong-doing, incompetency and extravagance were exposed.

"We must not lose sight of the fact," said Mr. Hall, "that the Government are the trustees of some very valuable property. In New Ontario there are hundreds of thousands of acres of lands, rich in minerals, hundreds of thousands of acres of timber, which are under the control of the Government. How do we know that this property is being properly administered? Do we know that a proper price is being obtained from this timber, or that the people of the Province are receiving their rights in connection with the mineral wealth?

A Glaring Instance.

This naturally brought Mr. Hall to that famous transaction with the Gillies' Limit, which proved such a lucrative speculation for Messrs. O'Brien and Young. He showed how the Ontario Government had placed a small block on sale in the middle of winter, when no opportunity was given of prospecting, and how Messrs. Young and O'Brien bought the property for $10,500, and with a further expenditure of $3,500, sold it three months later to a Montreal syndicate for $330,000, cleaning up the handsome sum of $316,000. That was the kind of thing that should be properly investigated, and which could not be unless the Opposition was strong enough.

Relief for Workingmen.

There was enthusiasm when Mr. Hall reached his favourite subject—the Workmen's Compensation Act. His clear-cut and logical handling of this prominent feature in his platform made a most favourable impression, and was warmly applauded. "That is the plank on which I stand," said Mr. Hall, "the remodelling of the Workmen's Compensation Act, so that it will embody the best features of the English and German Acts, giving fair and equitable and adequate relief to the workingman. I notice that Mr. Peck says that a new measure has been under consideration by the Government, and yet nothing has been done in seven years. My idea is that an act placed on a proper basis would give every workman who was injured ample damages without a law suit. The thing could work out on the same lines as fire insurance. When a man's house burns down, the loss is adjusted without a lawsuit, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, and he receives recompense for his loss."

A Sad Experience.

Mr. Hall said that it had been his sad experience during his practice, of having workingmen come to him with their hands injured, perhaps a finger, or a thumb, off, seeking redress, and to have to tell them that, owing to the state of the law, nothing could be done for them. If an Act such as he proposed were enacted, not only would the workingman have relief, but the employer would take greater precautions. He would adopt new and modern methods, so that injuries and accidents would be obviated as far as possible. Everybody knew the extreme precautions a manufacturer took to protect his building from danger of destruction by fire—he would be just as anxious to prevent injury to his employees if the Act was as it should be, and as Mr. Hall intended that it would be. Under such an Act the employer would sit up at nights devising *means to properly protect his work*ingmen. "I pledge myself," said Mr. Hall emphatically, "if the electors of West Peterborough will give me their confidence to do my utmost to see that a just and a fair, and an adequate Compensation Act is placed on the statute books of Ontario" —a statement that was greeted with cheers and enthusiastic applause.

The Hon. A. B. Morine, in his speech here the other night," continued Mr. Hall, "said that the English Compensation Act was responsible for more law suits than any other measure. I don't believe Mr. Morine made that statement with any knowledge of the facts. Statistics show that 335,000 workingmen have been recompensed for injuries, and in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred no lawsuits have taken place."

Short-Sighted Educational Policy.

Mr. Hall passed on to pay his respects to the Whitney educational policy, and utterly demolished the claim that that Government had administered this department efficiently. He showed how the Government had abolished Model Schools and, as a result, had cut short the supply of qualified teachers and prevented the poor man's children from going into the teaching profession. So intolerable had the conditions become that in ten counties in Ontario sixty per cent. of the teachers in the schools were unqualified. The education of the children, in many cases, was being neglected. While $488,000 was being paid to Toronto University, only $234,000 was being expended on the Public Schools of the Province. The system was top-heavy and the masses were being neglected. "I saw a short time ago," said Mr. Hall, "advertisements for one hundred and twenty teachers, in the Province of Ontario. Why, I have been through the northern part of this riding and have found schools closed for want of teachers. Throughout the Province there is the least average attendance in twenty years".

Injustice to French People.

Bad as the conditions were in the English Public Schools, they were worse in the communities where the majority of people spoke French. It was absolutely impossible to get qualified teachers for such schools, and the situation was developing into an alarming state of affairs. There were schools in the Province where neither teacher or pupils could speak a word of English. Mr. Hall showed how the Conservative Cabinet was at sixes and sevens over this matter. He pointed out that while Whitney said there were no bilingual schools, Attorney-General Foy said that there could not legally be bilingual schools and if there were any they must cease to exist, and Dr. Reaume, Minister of Public Works, announced that Foy was speaking on his own hook.

A Remedy Proposed.

As far as he had heard, or read, Mr. Peck had said nothing that suggested how this state of affairs was going to be remedied. "As for me," said Mr. Hall, "I claim that these two great principles should be observed, as I have stated in my address to the electors:

(a) That every child should have a thoroughly elementary education;

(b) That every child should have a knowledge of the English language".

The proper remedy to pursue is to have a body of well-trained teachers to teach the French children, the English language, and the course of instruction should be given in English. One of the greatest possible handicaps a person could have in Ontario is to have no knowledge of the English language, and I maintain that the French people of the province are being done a great injustice. The trouble is that the Whitney Government has not carried out the existing law."

Neglecting New Ontario.

Mr. Hall went on to show how the Whitney Government had neglected New Ontario. He effectively pointed out the manner in which the Toronto Telegram, a Conservative organ had criticized the administration by the Government of this part of the Province. He ridiculed, to the satisfaction of the audience the statement of Premier Whitney, that the Province would not be better off by having a hundred new settlers in New Ontario, because the Government would have some expenditure on education, administration of justice, etc. The people of Peterborough realised how important the settling of New Ontario and its consequent demands for manufactured articles would be. The arbitrary nature of the ostrich-like attitude of the Premier, in regard to tax-reform was adequately illustrated by Mr. Hall, who quoted from the Ottawa Citizen, the most influential Conservative organ in the Eastern part of the Province, to show what the friends of the Government though about the manner in which the Premier treated, or rather, refused to treat, this most important subject, about which he had been asked to act by deputations representing hundreds of municipalities, who asked for the privilege of making their laws as they liked in regard to assessment.

The Hydro-Electric Bluff.

Mr. Hall wound up a most effective speech by pricking the Hydro-Electric balloon. He referred to the first announcement that had been made that 3,000 h.p. could be developed at Dam No. 4, and this was to supply Peterborough and Lakefield, while 5,000 h.p. could be obtained from Dam No. 8, and this was to furnish power for municipalities in the eastern section of the district. He had pointed out that the report of the Hydro-Electric's own engineer showed that only 1,100 horse-power could be developed, whereupon the Review had taken another tack, and announced that the Hydro-Electric did not propose to use Dam No. 4, alone—that would only give 1,100 h. p. and would not be worth considering." Then came the announcement in the Toronto News, that Dams Nos. 4 and 5, were going to be used; that they would give 20,000 to 25,000 horse power, and then the Hydro-Electric Commission was going to spend six million dollars on power in the Trent district. At the same time the report of the Hydro-Electric's own engineer showed that only 2,280 h.p. could be developed. "Why don't they put up a business proposition that their own report will bear out?" asked Mr. Hall. "If they can show us a plan by which we are going to get light and power cheaper I will throw up my hands and do my best to help to obtain it, but I am not going to be a party to handing a gold-brick to the City of Peterborough. If I have to use a gold-brick proposition in order to be elected I would sooner be defeated."

In conclusion, Mr. Hall read a strong condemnation from the To*ronto News of the autocratic action* of the Commission in regard to the Electrical Development Company. He hoped the day would never come when he would have to support a Government that had received such a ernment that had received such a condemnation as that.

HER CELEBRATION

"Because I heard Deacon Hope telling the minister that he had called on you to ask you to contribute to buy chickens for the poor, and you said you would be lucky if you had any chicken for yourself. I'm sorry you have lost all your money and become poor, and I'm willing to help you all I can."

The rich man turned red and white and hitched around uneasily, and it was a minute or two before he could send Aunt Mary away with her rooster under her arm. She would not go until he had assured her that he thought he could manage some way to scrape up a chicken for the family dinner.

The next call was made at the house of another man reputed to be wealthy. He had the highest priced pew in the church, and drove to and fro in his carriage. He wasn't home, but his wife received Aunt Mary and had considerable curiosity concerning her errand. Into the richly furnished and brilliantly lighted parlour was ushered the little old woman and the half-frozen body of the half-starved rooster, but the caller was not abashed.

"It seems too awful bad that all these beautiful things have got to be sold," said the caller, after a look around.

"Why, what do you mean?" Aunt Mary was asked.

"House and furniture and horses any everything to be sold! I know how you will feel and I pity you. You won't have enough left to buy a Thanksgiving dinner, but I have thought of you. Here is the last chicken of my coop."

There were ejaculations and exclamations and demands for a clearer explanation, and Aunt Mary humbly said:

"Deacon Hope asked your husband for money to buy Thanksgiving chickens for the poor, and your husband said that if his debts were paid he couldn't buy an old hen for his own dinner. I heard the deacon tell the minister this."

Aunt Mary got out with her rooster, but she left a very indignant woman behind her. Her husband probably had a very bad half hour that evening. The third call was at the house of one of the trustees of the church. His wife wore diamonds and had her own carriage. His daughters were richly dressed and he had a son at college. He was home when Aunt Mary was admitted. He knew her to be poor, and at sight of her took a dime from his pocket and extended his hand. She looked at the coin and then asked:

"Brother Blank, I thank you, but I know things are with you. I heard Deacon Hope telling the minister all about it this afternoon."

"What did you hear him telling?"

"You know the minister wants to raise a fund to buy chickens for the poor on Thanksgiving. Deacon Hope called on you about it, and you said you couldn't give him a dollar. You said you had notes coming due, and relatives to take care of, and was sailing mighty close to the wind. You said——"

"By thunder!" exclaimed the trustee, "but if Deacon Hope has been telling anything of the kind I'll punch his head!"

"And knowing you to be so hard up, and knowing how disappointed the girls would be not to have any Thanksgiving dinner, I killed my last chicken and brought it over to you. It's a rooster and he is old and tough, but your wife has a whole week to boil him in."
